Remarks On The Life and Writings Of Dr. Jonathan Swift, Dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin

Orrery, John Boyle of

London, 1752

Remarks upon A Proposal for the universal Use of Irish Manufacture in Cloaths, and Furniture of Houses, &c.

I cannot help pointing out to you, one particular piece of satyr, that is entirely in SWIFT's own style and manner. In the fourth page, he expresses himself thus. "One of these authors (the fellow that was pilloried, I have forgot his name) is indeed so grave, so sententious, dogmatical a rogue, that there is no enduring him." The fellow that was pilloried was DANIEL DEFOE, whose name SWIFT well knew and remembered, but the circumstance of the pillory was to be introduced; and the manner of introducing it, shews great art in the nicest touches of satyr, and carries all the marks of ridicule, indignation, and contempt. The scoffs and sarcasms of SWIFT, like the bite of the rattlesnake, distinguish themselves more venomously dangerous, than the wounds of a common serpent.

The next tract is, A Proposal for the universal use of Irish Manufacture in clothes, and furniture of houses, &c. utterly rejecting and renouncing every thing wearable that comes from England. Written in the year 1720. In a former letter^a, I believe I have told you, that, upon looking over the dates of Dr. SWIFT's works, he does not appear as a political writer from the year 1714 to the year 1720. You will probably be curious to know, in what manner he employed his time from the death of the Queen till the South-sea year. Not in poetry, for his poetical pieces, during that period, are in a manner domestic; being scarce any more than trifles to SHERIDAN, or poematia to STELLA. How then is the chasm to be filled up? I imagine, by GULLIVER'S travels. Such a work must, in all likelihood, have engrossed his leisure, during five or six years. When that was finished, he found an opening to indulge his love of politics, and to commence a patriot for Ireland: and he made use of the opportunity, by encreasing the natural jealousy which the lesser island constantly entertains of the greater. His treatise, or proposal, immediately raised a very violent flame. The printer was prosecuted: and the prosecution had the same effect, which generally attends those kind of measures: it added fuel to the flame. But his greatest enemies must confess, that the pamphlet is written in the style of a man, who had the good of his country nearest his heart, who saw her errors, and wished to correct them; who felt her oppressions, and wished to relieve them; and who had a desire to rouse, and awaken an indolent nation from a lethargic disposition, that might prove fatal to her constitution.

To the proposal, in favour of the Irish manufactures, succeed, Some Arguments against enlarging the Power of Bishops in letting of Leases. This is too serious a pamphlet for your perusal, nor shall I detain you with any farther account of it, than to say, that it is intermixt with those masterly strokes of irony, which so often appear in SWIFT'S works.

But the general subject of the pamphlet leads me to recollect a circumstance much to the Dean's honour. He could never be induced to take fines for any of the chapter lands. He always chose to raise the rents, as the method least oppressive to the present tenant, and most advantageous to all future tenants and landlords. He constantly refused to give charity out of the chapter funds, which he alledged were scarce sufficient to maintain the necessary repairs of the cathedral. I have already told you ^a, that, among his prebendaries, the vox Decani was the vox Dei.

We are now come to THE DRAPIER'S Letters, those brazen monuments of his fame. They were written in the year 1724. I have said so much in one of my former letters ^b of the cause which gave rise to them, and of the effect which they had upon the nation, that I need say no more in this place, than to recommend them to your perusal, for the style and conduct of their manner: but, lest they may appear too grave to so young a man, and one who is so little interested in the present, and much less in the past affairs of Ireland, you will find a paper at the end of them that will excite your risibility, or I am mistaken. It is entitled, A full and true account of the solemn procession to the Gallows at the execution of WILLIAM WOOD, Esq; and hard-ware-man^c. The author makes the several artificers attend WILLIAM WOOD (represented by a log of timber) to the gallows, and each tradesman expresses his resentment in the terms of his proper calling. "The COOK will
" BASTE him. The BOOKSELLER will TURN OVER A
" NEW LEAF with him. The TAYLOR will fit IN HIS
" SKIRTS;" and so on, through a number of people of different conditions. Then follows the procession, most humourously described. The whole is a piece of ridicule too powerful for the strongest gravity to withstand.

The next tract is, A short view of the state of Ireland, written in the year 1727^a. Of this I need take little notice, since the present state of Ireland is, in general, as flourishing as possible. Agriculture is cultivated: arts and sciences are encouraged: and in the space of eighteen years, which is almost the full time that I have known it, no kingdom can be more improved. Ireland, in relation of England, may be compared to a younger sister lately come of age, after having suffered all the miseries of an injured minor; such as law suits, encroachments upon her property, violation of her rights, destruction of her tenants, and every evil that can be named. At length, time, and her own noble spirit of industry, have entirely relieved her, and, some little heart-burnings excepted, she enjoys the quiet possession of a very ample fortune, subject, by way of acknowledgement, to certain quit rents, payable to the elder branch of her house: and let me add by experience, that take her all in all, she cannot have a greater fortune than she deserves.

I shall not make any comments upon An Answer to a Paper called A Memorial of the poor Inhabitants, Tradesmen, and Labourers of the Kingdom of Ireland, written in the year 1728^b. The pamphlet which comes next in
