392 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

not only as an act of friendship, but of charity, for I have not a shirt to my back. I therefore must beg of you to procure me some Irish linen to make me four dozen of shirts, much about the same fineness and price of the last which you got me. I know you too well to make any excuses for giving you this trouble. Adieu! my dear lord; you know my fentiments with regard to you, too well for me to mention them. I am,

Most fincerely and faithfully,

-men and drive as seemed blood Yours, day

CHESTERFIELD.

P. S. Lady Chesterfield charges me with her compliments.

L E T T E R LXX.

TO THE SAME.

London, Aug. 15, 1770.

MY DEAR LORD,

HE linen, which you were so kind as to procure me, dropped out of the clouds into my house in town last week, and is declared, by better judges than I am, very good, and very cheap. I shall not thank you for it, but on the contrary expect your thanks for giving you an opportunity of doing what always gives you pleafure, cloathing the naked. I am fure that, could you equally relieve all my other wants, you would; but there is no relief for the miseries of a crazy old age, but patience: and as I have many of Job's ills, thank God, I have some of his patience too, and I consider my present wretched old age as a just compensation for the follies, not to fay fins, of my youth.

I send you here inclosed some melon-seed, of the best and largest canteloup kind, and also of the green Persian fort, as much as I can venture at one time with the post; but as none can be fown at this time of the year, I will from time to time fend you more, so that you shall have of different kinds before the feason. Adieu, my dear lord; my eyes will have it fo.
