

Universitätsbibliothek Paderborn

Montaigne's Essays

In Three Books. With Notes and Quotations. And an Account of The Author's Life; With a short Character of the Author and Translator, by the late Marquis of Halifax; With the Addition of A Complete Table to each Volume

Montaigne, Michel Eyquem de London, 1743

Essays Of Michael Seigr. de Montaigne. Book. I. Part II.

urn:nbn:de:hbz:466:1-53388

ESSAYS

OF

Michael Seigr. de Montaigne.

BOOK I. PART II.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Nine and twenty Sonnets of Estienne de la Boëtie, to Madam de Grammont, Countess of Guisson.

Mefince De-

ideawhecontheir But come give very

MON

ersi

rit, s lie

his ban vim

and ver

1471-

out

ADAM, I offer your Ladyship nothing of mine, either because it is already yours, or because I find nothing in my Writings worthy of you: But I have a great Desire that these Verses, into what Part of the World soever they may travel, may carry your Name in the Front, for the Honour will accrue to them, by having the great Corifanda de Andonis for their fafe Conduct: I conceive this Prefent, Madam, so much the more proper for you, both by Reason there are few Ladies in France, who are so good Judges of Poetry, and make so good Use of it as you Vol. 1.

18 MONTAIGNE'S Essays.

do; as also that there is none who can give it that Spirit and Life your Ladyship does, by that incomparable Voice Nature has added to your other Perfections; you will find, Madam, that these Verses deserve your Esteem, and will, I dare fay, concur with me in this, that Gascony never yielded more Invention, finer Expression, or any that more evidently shew themselves to have flowed from a masterly Hand: Be not jealous then that you have but the Remainder of what I published some Years since, under the Name of Monsieur de Foix, your brave Kinsman; for certainly these have something in them more spritch and luxuriant, as being writ in a greener Youth, and enflamed with that noble Ardour which I will tell you Ladyship in your Ear. The other were writ since, when he was a Suitor in the Honour of his Wife, already relia ing I know not what matrimonial Coldness: And for my Part, I am of the same Opinion with those who hold that Poefy appears no where fo gay, as in a wanton and irregular Subject.

These nine and twenty Sonnets that were inserted here, all fince printed with his other Works.

CHAP. XXIX.

Of Moderation.

A S if we had an infectious Touch, we, by our Manne of Handling, corrupt Things that in themselves are laudable and good: We may grasp Virtue so hard, 'ill's becomes vicious, if we embrace it too streight, and with too violent a Desire. Those who say, there is never any Excess in Virtue, forasmuch as it is no Virtue, when some becomes Excess, only play upon Words.

Insani sapiens nomen serat, æquus iniqui, Ultra quam satis est, wirtutem si petat ipsam*.

* Horace l. 1. Epift. 6.

Spirit

Voice

l find, will,

never

that rom 2

ut the under

i; for

and

l you when relih.

nd for

o hold on and ere, ali

Manne

elves an · 'illi nd with ver and when i

The

Degrees,

The Wise for Mad, the Just for Unjust pass, When more than needs, ev'n Virtue they embrace.

This is a fubtle Confideration in Philosophy. A Man may both be too much in Love with Virtue, and be exceffive in a just Action. Holy Writ agrees with this, Be not wifer than you should; but be soberly wife. I* have known a great Man prejudice the Opinion Men had of his Devotion by pretending to be devout beyond all Examples of others of his Condition. I love temperate and moderate Nature. An immoderate Zeel, even to that ture. An immoderate Zeal, even to that which is good, though it does not offend, does aftonish me, and puts me to study what Name to give it. Neither the Mother of Pausanias, who was the first Impeacher of her Son, and threw the first Stone towards his Death; nor Postbumus the Dictator, who put his Son to Death, whom the Ardour of Youth had fortunately pusht upon the Enemy a little more advanced than the rest of his Squadron, appear to me altogether as strange; and I should neither advise, nor like to follow, a Virtue so savage in itself, and that costs so dear. The Archer that shoots over misses as well as he that falls short, and 'tis equally troublesom to my Sight, to look up at a great Light, and to look down into a dark Abyss. Callicles in Plato says, That the Extremity of Philosophy is hurtful, and advises not to dive into it beyond the Limits of Profit; that taken moderately, it is pleasant and useful; but that in the End, it renders a Man brutish and vicious; a Contemner of Religion and the common Laws; an Enemy to civil Conversation, and all human Pleasures; incapable of all publick Administration; unfit either to assist others, or to relieve himself; and a fit Object for all Sorts of Injuries and Affronts, without Remedy or. Satisfaction: He says true, for in it's Excess, it enslaves our natural Freedom, and by an impertinent Subtilty, leads us out of the fair and beaten Way that Nature has plained out for us. The Love we bear to our Wives is very lawful, and yet Theology thinks fit to curb and restrain it. As I remember, I have read in one Place of St. Thomas of Aquin, where he condemns Marriage within any of the forbidden

Montaigne's Esfays.

220

Degrees, for this Reason, amongst others, that there is some Danger, lest the Friendship a Man bears to such a Woman should be immoderate; for if the conjugal Affection be full and perfect betwixt them, as ought to be, and that it be over and above surcharged with that of Kindred too, there is no Doubt but fuch an Addition will carry the Husbandbe yond the Bounds of Reafon. Those Sciences that regulate the Manners of Men, Divinity and Philosophy, will have a Saying to every Thing. There is no Action fo private that can escape their Inspection and Jurisdiction, but they are best taught, who are best able to censure and curb their own Liberty. 'Tis the Women that expose their No dities over freely, upon the Account of Pleasure, thoughin the Necessities of Physick and Chirurgery, they are molthy and more referved. I will therefore, in their Behalf, teach the Husbands, that is, such as are too extravagant and se fual in the Exercise of the matrimonial Duty, this Lesson, that the very Pleasures they enjoy in the Society of their Wives, are reproachable, if immoderate, and that alice tious and riotous Abuse of them, are Faults, as reproveable here, as illegitimate and adulterous Practices. Thoseir modest and debauched Tricks and Postures, that the sit Ardour fuggests to us in this Affair, are not only indecent but inconveniently practifed upon our Wives. Let then at least learn Impudency from another Hand; they are ways ready enough for our Bufiness, and I, for my Part, ways went the plain Way to work. Marriage is a folem and religious Tie, and therefore the Pleasure we extract from thence should be a sober and serious Delight, and min with a certain Kind of Gravity; it should be a Kind of di creet and conscientious Pleasure. And being that the child End of it is Generation, some make a Question whether when Men are out of Hopes of that Fruit, as when that Wives are superannuated or already with Child, it belanful to lye with them. 'Tis Homicide, according to Plan and certain Nations (the Mahometan amongst others) about nate all Conjunction with Women with Child, and other alfo, with those who are unclean. Zenobia would nero admit her Husband for more than one Encounter, after which she left him to his own Swing for the whole Time of her Conception, and not 'till after that, would any more fome oman

e full

it be there

nd begulate

have rivate

t they

ir Nu-

ughin

ofthy

teach

id fer

effor,

their lices.

ofe in he firt

centi

then arear

art, al

folem

Et from

d mix of di

le chief hether,

en their

be law

o Platin

abomi

other

never

r, after

e Tim

ny mort

recelle

recieve him: A brave Example of conjugal Continency. It was doubtless from some lascivious Poet, and one that himself was in great Distress for a little of this Sport, that Plato borrowed this Story; that Jupiter was one Day so hot upon his Wife, that not having fo much Patience, as 'till she could get to the Couch, he threw her upon the Floor, where the Vehemency of Pleasure made him forget the great and important Resolutions he had but newly taken with the rest of the Gods, in his coelestial Council; and to brag, that he had had as good a Bout as when he got her Maidenhead unknown to her Parents. The Kings of Persia were wont to invite their Wives to the Beginning of their Festivals; but when the Wine began to work in good Earnest, and that they were to give the Reins to Pleasure, they sent them back to their private Apartment, that they might not participate of their immoderate Lust, sending for other Women in their Stead, with whom they were not obliged to fo great a Decorum of Respect. All Pleasures, and all Sorts of Gratifications, are not properly and fitly conferred upon all Sorts of Persons. Epaminondas had committed a young Man for certain Debauches; for whom Pelopidas mediated, that at his Request he might be set at Liberty, which, notwithstanding the great Understanding betwixt them, Epaminondas resolutely denied to him, but granted it at the first Word to a Wench of his, who made the same Intercesfion; faying, that it was a Gratification fit for fuch a one as the, but not for a Captain. Sophocles being joint Prætor with Pericles, feeing accidentally a fine Boy pass by, O! what a delicate Boy is that, faid he: Ay, that were a Prize, answered Pericles, for any other than a Prætor, who ought not only to have his Hands, but his Eyes chafte. Elius Verus the Emperor, answered his Wife, who reproached him with his Love to other Women, That he did it upon a conscientious Account, inasmuch as Marriage was a Name of Honour and Dignity, not of wanton and lascivious Defire. And our Ecclefiastical History preserves the Memory of that Woman in great Veneration, who parted from her Husband, because she would not comply with his indecent and inordinate Defire. In fine, there is no so just and lawful Pleasure, wherein the Intemperance and Excess is not to be condemned. But to speak the Truth, is not Man a most miserable Creature the while? It is scarce, by his natural Condition, in his Power to taste one Pleasure pure and entire; and yet he must be contriving Doctrines and Precepts, to cutal that little he has; he is not yet wretched enough unless by Art and Study he augments his own Misery.

Montaigne's Esfays.

Fortunæ miseras auximus arte vias *.

We with Misfortune 'gainst ourselves take Part, And our own Miseries encrease by Art.

Human Wisdom makes as ill Use of her Talent, when the exercises it in rescinding from the Number and Sweetness of those Pleasures that are naturally our Due, as she em ploys it favourably and well, in artificially difguifing and tricking out the Ills of Life, to alleviate the Sense of them. Had I ruled the Roast, I should have taken another, and most natural Courfe, which, to fay the Truth, is both commodion and facred, and should, peradventure, have been able to have limited it too. Notwithstanding that both our spiritual and corporal Physicians, as by Compact betwixt themselves, can find no other Way to cure, nor other Remedy for the later mities of the Body and the Soul, than what is oft-time worse than the Disease, by tormenting us more, and by adding to our Misery and Pain. To this End Watching Fastings, Hair-shirts, remote and solitary Banishment, perpetual Imprisonments, Whips, and other Afficions, have been introduced amongst Men: But so, that the should carry a Sting with them, and be real Affiction indeed; and not fall out fo as it once did to one Gallio, whi having been fent an Exile into the Isle of Lesbos, News with not long after brought to Rome, that he there lived as me ry as the Day was long; and that what had been enjoined him for a Penance turned to his greatest Pleasure and Sath faction: Whereupon the Senate thought fit to recal him home to his Wife and Family, and confine him to 10 own House, to accommodate their Punishment to his Feeling and Apprehension. For to him whom Fasting would make more healthful and more spritely, and to him whose Palate Fish was more acceptable than Flesh, it would

* Propert. 1. 3. Ele. 6.

d yet

urtai

els by enfle

etnels

e emg and them.

mon

o have al and es, call

e Infr

-time

nd by hing

ment

Etions

t they

io. Whi

WS Was

IS MEI

110Inti

1 Satil

al hin

to his

Feeling

Would

him to

WOUL

be no proper nor fanative Receipt; no more than in the other Sort of Physick, where the Drugs have no Effect upon him who fwallows them with Appetite and Pleasure. The Bitterness of the Potion, and the Abhorrence of the Patient, are necessary Circumstances to the Operation. The Nature that would eat Rhubarb like butter'd Turnips, would frustrate the Use and Virtue of it; it must be something to trouble and diffurb the Stomach, that must purge and cure it: And here the common Rule, that Things are cured by their Contraries, fails; for in this, one ill is cured by another. This Belief a little resembles that other so ancient one, of thinking to gratify the Gods and Nature by Self-murther; an Opinion univerfally once received in all Religions, and to this Day retained in some. For in these latter Times wherein our Fathers lived, Amurath, at the taking of an Isthmus, immolated fix Hundred young Greeks to his Father's Soul, in the Nature of a propitiatory Sacrifice for the Sins of the Deceased. And in those new Countries discovered in this Age of ours, which are pure, and Virgins yet, in Comparison of ours, this Practice is in some Measure every where received. All their Idols reek with human Blood, not without various Examples of horrid Cruelty. Some they burn alive, and half broiled take them off the Coals to tear out their Hearts and Entrails; others even Women they flea alive, and with their bloody Skins clothe and disguise others. Neither are we without great Examples of Constancy and Resolution in this Affair: The poor Souls that are to be facrificed, old Men, Women, and Children, going some Days before to beg Alms for the Offering of their Sacrifice, and fo finging and dancing, present themselves to the Slaughter. The Ambassadors of the King of Mexico, fetting out to Fernando Cortez the Power and Greatness of their Master, after having told him that he had thirty Vassals, of which each was able to raise an hundred Thousand fighting Men, and that he kept his Court in the fairest and best fortified City under the Sun, added at laft, that he was obliged yearly to offer the Gods fifty Thoufand Men. And it is confidently affirmed, that he maintained a continual War with fome potent neighbouring Nations, not only to keep the young Men in Exercise, but principally, to have wherewithal to furnish his Sacrifices with his Prisoners of War. At a certain Town in another Q 4

MONTAIGNE'S Esays.

224

Place, for the Welcome of the faid Cortez, they facrificed fifty Men at once. I will tell you this one Tale more, and I have done; fome of these People being beaten by him, sent to compliment him, and to treat with him of a Peace, whose Messengers carried him three Sorts of Presents, which they presented in these Terms: Behold, Lord, here are five Slaves, if thou art a furious God that feeds upon Flesh and Blood, eat these, and we will bring thee more; if thou art an affable God, behold here Incense and Feathers; but if thou art a Man, take these Fowls and these Fruits that we have brought thee.

CHAP. XXX.

Of Cannibals.

HEN Pyrrhus King of Epirus invaded lially having viewed and confidered the Order of the Army the Romans fent out to meet him; I know not, faid he, what Kind of Barbarians (for fo the Greeks called all other Nations) these may be; but the Discipline of this Army that I fee has nothing of Barbarity in it. As much said the Greeks of that which Flaminius brought into their Country; and Philip beholding, from an Eminence, the Order and the Disposition of the Roman Camp, led into his Kingdom by Publius Sulpitius Galba, spake to the fame Effect. By which it appears, how cautious Men ought to be, of taking Things upon Trust from vulgar Opinion, and that we are to judge by the Eye of Reason, and not from common Report. I have long had a Man in my House, that lived ten or twelve Years in the new World discovered in these latter Days, and in that Part of it where Velegaignon landed, which he called Antarlick Frant. This Discovery of so vast a Country seems to be of very great Consideration; and we are not sure, that hereaster there may not be another, fo many wifer Men than we having been deceived in this. I am afraid our Eyes are bigger than our Bellies, and that we have more Curiofity than Capacity; and

him,

eace,

ents,

nere

apon

ore;

Fea-

these

Italy, the faid ad all this nuch

their

the

into fame night

nion,

d not n my vhere

anci.

very eafter

bigthan

city;

Capacity; for we grasp at all, but catch nothing but Air. Plato brings in Solon, telling a Story that he had heard from the Priests of Sais in Ægypt, that of old, and before the Deluge, there was a great Island call'd Atlantis, situate directly at the Mouth of the Streight of Gibralter, which contain'd more Ground than both Africk and Afra put together; and that the Kings of that Country, who not only possest that Isle, but extended their Dominion so far into the Continent, that they had a Country as large as Africk to Ægypt, and as long as Europe to Tuscany, attempted to encroach even upon Asia, and to subjugate all the Nations that border upon the Mediterranean Sea, as far as the Gulph of Mare Maggiore; and to that Effect over-ran all Spain, the Gauls, and Italy, fo far as to penetrate into Greece, where the Athenians stopt the Torrent of their Arms: But some Time after, both the Athenians, they, and their Island, were swallowed by the Flood.

It is very likely, that this violent Irruption and Inundation of Water made a wonderful Change, and strange Alteration in the Habitations of the Earth: As 'tis said that the Sea then divided Sicily from Italy;

Hæc locavi quondam, & vasta convulsa ruina, Distiluisse ferunt : cum protinus utraque tellus, Una foret *.

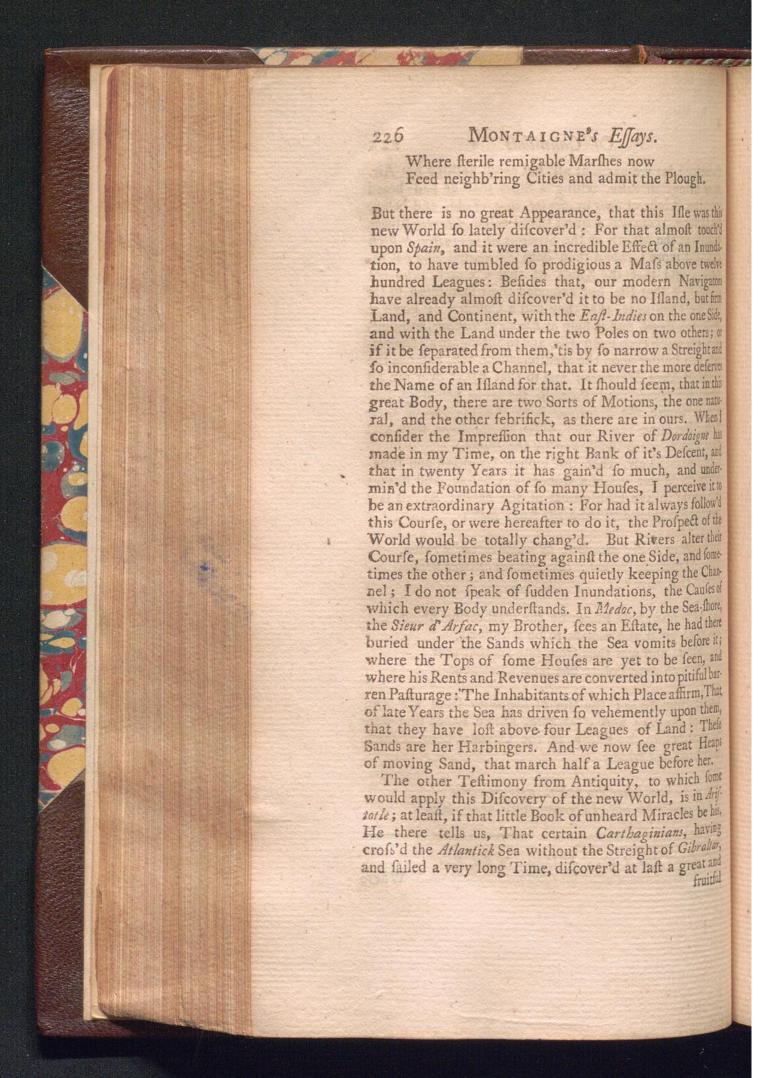

'Tis faid those Places by the o'erbearing Flood, Too great and violent to be withstood, Split, and was thus from one another rent, Which were before one folid Continent.

Cyprus from Syria; the Isle of Negropont from the firm Land of Bæotia; and elsewhere, united Lands that were separate before, by filling up the Channel betwixt them with Sand and Mud;

Sterilesque diu palus, aptaque remis Ficinas urbes alit, & grave sentit aratrum +.

* Virg. Æn. 1. 3. + Horat. in Art. Poet.

Where

fruitful Island, all cover'd over with Wood, and water'd with several broad and deep Rivers; far remote from all firm Land, and that they, and others after them, allur'd by the Pleasantness and Fertility of the Soil, went thither with their Wives and Children, and began to plant a Colony: But the Senate of Carthage, vifibly perceiving their People by little and little to grow thin, iffu'd out an express Prohibition, That no one, upon Pain of Death, should transport themselves thither; and also drove out these new Inhabitants; fearing, 'tis said, lest in Process of Time, they should so multiply, as to supplant themselves, and ruin their State. But this Relation of Aristotle's does no more agree with our new found Lands, than the other. This Man that I have is a plain ignorant Fellow, and therefore the more likely to tell Truth: For your better bred Sort of Men are much more curious in their Observation. 'Tis true, they discover a great deal more, but then they gloss upon it, and to give the greater Weight to what they deliver, and allure your Belief, they cannot forbear a little to alter the Story: They never represent Things to you fimply as they are, but rather as they appear'd to them, or as they would have them appear to you, and to gain the Reputation of Men of Judgment, and the better to induce your Faith, are willing to help out the Bufiness with fomething more than is really true, of their own Invention. Now in this Case we should either have a Man of irreproachable Veracity, or so simple, that he has not wherewithal to contrive and to give a Colour of Truth to false Relations, and that can have no Ends in forging an Untruth. Such a one is mine; and besides, the little Suspicion the Man lyes under, he has divers Times shewed me several Seamen and Merchants, that at the same Time went the fame Voyage. I shall therefore content myself with his Information, without enquiring what the Colmographers fay to the Bufiness. We should have Maps to trace out to us the particular Places where they have been; but for having had this Advantage over us, to have feen the Holy Land, they would have the Privilege forfooth, to tell us Stories of all the other Parts of the World befides. I would have every one write what he knows, and as much as he knows, but no more; and that not in this only, but in all other Subjects: Eor fuch a Person may have iome as this undawelve

gaton

at firm

rs; or ht and eferves

in this

natu

Then I

ne has

t, and

e it to low'd

of the

their fome-

Chan-

ifes of fhore,

there

re it;

and

Il bar-

That

hem,

Thele

Teaps

er.

fome

Arij.

e his

lving

altar,

t and

uitful

fome particular Knowledge and Experience of the Nature of such a River; or such a Fountain, that as to other Things knows no more than what every Body does, and yet to keep a Clutter with this little Pittance of his, will undertake to write the whole Body of Physicks: A Vice from whence great Inconveniencies derive their Original

228

Now, to return to my Subject, I find that there is no thing barbarous and favage in this Nation, by any Thing that I can gather, excepting, That every one gives the Title of Barbarity to every Thing that is not in Use in his own Country: As indeed we have no other Level of Truth and Reason, than the Example and Idea of the Opinions and Customs of the Place wherein we live. There is always the true Religion, there the perfect Government, and the most exact and accomplish'd Usance of all Things They are Savages at the same Rate, that we say Fruits are wild, which Nature produces of herfelf, and by her own ordinary Progrefs; whereas in Truth, we ought rathern call those wild, whose Natures we have chang'd by our Artifice, and diverted from the common Order. In thos, the genuine, most useful and natural Virtues and Propertis, are vigorous and spritely, which we have help'd to degent rate in these, by accommodating them to the Pleasure of our own corrupted Palate. And yet for all this, our Tall confesses a Flavour and Delicacy, excellent even to Emula tion of the best of ours, in several Fruits those Countries abound with, without Art or Culture; neither is it reasonable, that Art should gain the Pre-eminence of our great and powerful Mother, Nature. We have so oppress'd her with the additional Ornaments and Graces which we have added to the Beauty and Riches of our ownWorks by our Inventions, that we have almost smother'd and choak's her; and yet in other Places, where she shines in her own Purity, and proper Luftre, she strangely baffles and dir graces all our vain and frivolous Attempts,

> Et veniunt hederæ sponte sua melius, Surgit & in solis formosfor arbutus antris, Et volucres nulla dulcius arte canunt *.

> > * Propest. l. 1. Elec. 2.

The

Vature

other

and will

Vice ginal

18 HOl'hing es the le in vel of

of the

There

ment,

nings.

its are

r own

herw

TUO T

thole,

ertic,

gene-

ure of

Tafe

mula-intri6

afona-

it and her have

V OU

oak'd

OWI

l dil-

The

The Ivy best spontaneously does thrive, Th' Arbutus best in shady Caves does live, And Birds in their wild Notes their Throats do stretch With greater Art, than Art itself can teach.

Our utmost Endeavours cannot arrive at so much as to imitate the Nest of the least of Birds, it's Contexture, Queintness and Convenience: Not so much as the Web of a contemptible Spider. All Things, fays Plato, are produc'd either by Nature, by Fortune, or by Art; the greatest and most beautiful by the one, or the other of the former, the least and the most imperfect by the last. These Nations then feem to me to be fo far barbarous, as having receiv'd but very little Form and Fashion from Art and human Invention, and confequently, not much remote from their original Simplicity. The Laws of Nature however govern them still, not as yet much vitiated with any Mixture of ours: But in fuch Purity, that I am fometimes troubled we were no fooner acquainted with these People, and that they were not difcover'd in those better Times, when there were Men much more able to judge of them, than we are. I am forry that Lycurgus and Plato had no Knowledge of them; for to my Apprehension, what we now see in those Natives, does not only furpass all the Images with which the Poets have adorn'd the Golden Age, and all their Inventions in feigning a happy State of Man; but moreover the Fancy, and even the Wish and Defire of Philosophy itself; so native, and fo pure a Simplicity, as we by Experience fee to be in them, could never enter into their Imagination, nor could they ever believe that human Society could have been maintain'd with fo little Artifice; should I tell Plato that it is a Nation wherein there is no Manner of Traffick, no Knowledge of Letters, no Science of Numbers, no Name of Magistrate, nor politick Superiority; no use of Service, Riches or Poverty; no Contracts, no Successions, no Dividends, no Properties, no Employments, but those of Leifure; no Respect of Kindred, but common; no Clothing, no Agriculture, no Metal, no use of Corn or Wine; and where so much as the very Words that fignify, Lying, Treachery, Diffimulation, Avarice, Envy, Detraction, and Pardon, were never heard of: How much would he find his imaginary Republick short of his Perfection?

Hos natura modos primum dedit +.

These were the Manners first by Nature taught.

As to the rest, they live in a Country, beautiful and plan fant to a Miracle, and fo temperate withal, as my Intelligence informs me, that 'tis very rare to hear of a fick Person; and they moreover affure me, that they never faw any of the Natives, either paralytick, blear-ey'd, toothless, or crooked with Age. The Situation of their Country is all along by the Sea-shore, and enclos'd on the other Side to wards the Land, with great and high Mountains, having about an hundred Leagues in Breadth between. They have great Store of Fish and Flesh Meat that have no Relemblance to ours, which they eat without any other Cookery, than plain Boiling, Roasting, or Broiling. The first that carried a Horse thither, though in several other Voyages he had contracted an Acquaintance and Familiarity with them, put them into fo terrible a Fright, that they kill'd him with their Arrows before they could come to discover who he he was. Their Buildings are very long, and of Capacity to hold two or three hundred People, made of the Barks of tall Trees, rear'd with one End upon the Ground, and leaning to, and supporting one another, at the Top, like fome of our Barns, of which the Covering hangs down to the very Ground, and ferves for the fide Walls. They have Wood fo hard, that they cleave it into Swords, and make Grills of it to broil their Meat. Their Beds are of Cotton, hung fwinging in the Roof, like our Seamen's Hammocks, for every one one, the Wives lying apart from them Husbands. They rife with the Sun, and so soon as they are up, eat for all Day; for they have no more Meals but that: They do not then drink, (as Suidas reports of tome other People of the East, that never drink at their Meass but drink very often all Day after, and fometimes to a rouning Pitch. Their Liquor is made of a certain Root, and 15 as red as our Claret; which they never drink but Luke warm.

* Vig. Georg. 2.

warm. It will keep above two or three Days, has a quick Talle, is nothing heady, but very comfortable to the Stomach, loofning to Strangers, and a very pleafant Beverage to such as are us'd to it. Instead of Bread, they make use of a certain white Matter, like Coriander Comfits; I have talled of it, the Tafte is sweet, and a little insipid. All the whole Day is spent in Dancing. Their young Men go a Hunting after wild Beafts with Bows and Arrows, and one part of their Women are employ'd in preparing their Drink the while, which is their chief Employment. There are some of their old Men, who in the Morning before they fall to Eating preach to the whole Family, as they walk to and fro from the one End of the House to the other, feveral Times repeating the same Sentence, 'till they have finish'd their Turn, (for their Houses are at least a hundred Yards long;) Valour towards their Enemies, and Love towards their Wives, are the two Heads of his Difcourse, and he never fails in the Close, to put them in Mind that they have fo much the greater Obligation to it, because they provide them their Drink warm, and well order'd. The Fashion of their Beds, Ropes, Swords, and Wooden Bracelets, which they tie about their Wrists, when they go to fight, and great Canes, boar'd hollow at one End, by the Sound of which they keep the Cadence of their Dances, are to be seen in several Places, and amongst others at my House. They shave all their hairy Parts. and much more neatly than we, without any other Razor than one of Wood, or of Stone. They believe the Immortality of the Soul, and that those who have merited well of the Gods, are lodg'd in that Part of Heaven where the Sun rifes; and the Accurfed in the West. They have I know not what kind of Priests and Prophets, that very rarely present themselves to the People, having their Abode in the Mountains. At their Arrival there is a great Feast, and solemn Assembly of many Villages made: That is, all the neighbouring Families, for every House, as I have defcrib'd it, makes a Village, and are about a French League distant from one another. This Prophet declaims to them in Publick, exhorting them to Virtue, and their Duty: But all their Ethicks terminate in these two Articles, of Resolution in War, and Affection to their Wives. This also prophefies to them Events to come, and the Islues pleatellirion;

ny of

, or e to-ving

fem-

that es he nem,

with

o he ty to

and like

OWN

'hey and re of am-heir

but ome

nd is ike.

rm.

they are to expect from their Enterprizes, prompts them to, or diverts them from War: But let him look to't; for if he fail in his Divination, and any Thing happen otherwife than he has foretold, he is cut into a thousand Pieces, if he be caught and condemn'd for a false Prophet; and for that Reason, if any of them finds himself miltaken, he is no more to be heard of. Divination is a Gift of God, and therefore to abuse it ought to be a punishable Imposture, Amongst the Scythians, where their Diviners fail'd in the promis'd Effect, they were laid, bound Hand and Foot, upon Carts loaden with Furz and Bavins, and drawn with Oxen, on which they were burnt to Death. Such as only meddle with Things subject to the Conduct of human Capacity, are excusable in doing the best they can: But those other Sort of People that come to delude us, with Affurances of an extraordinary Faculty, beyond our Un derstanding, ought they not to be punish'd for the Teme rity of their Imposture when they do not make good the Effect of their Promise? They have continual War with the Nations that live farther within the main Land, beyond their Mountains, to which they go naked, and without other Arms than their Bows, and Wooden-Swords, falloned at one End like the Head of a Javelin. The Oblinacy of their Battles is wonderful, and never end without great Effusion of Blood: For as to running away, they know not what it is. Every one for a Trophy brings home the Head of an Enemy he has kill'd, which he fixes over After having a long Time the Door of his House. treated their Prisoners very well, and given them all the Regalia's they can think of, he to whom the Prisoner belongs invites a great Assembly of his Kindred and Friends, who being come, he ties a Rope to one of the Arms of the Prisoner, of which at a Distance, out of his Reach, he holds the one End himself, and gives to the Friend he loves best, the other Arm, to hold after the same Manner; which being done, they two, in the Prefence of all the Affembly, dispatch him with their Swords. After that they roal him, eat him amongst them, and fend some Chops to their absent Friends, which nevertheless they do not do, as some think, for Nourishment, as the Scythians anciently did, but as a Representation of an extreme Revenge; as will immediately appear: Having observed the Portugueze,

them

t; for other-

ieces,

; and n, he

d, and in the

it, up-with

n Ca-

: But

with Un-

eme-

With

thout

fashi

Obtti-

they nome

over

Time

1 the

I pe-

ends, ms of h, he loves hich ably,

roaft

their

ently; as aeze,

Who

who where in League with their Enemies to inflict another Sort of Death upon any of them they took Prisoners; which was, to fet them up to the Girdle in the Earth, to shoot at the remaining Part 'till it was stuck full of Arrows, and then to hang them: They who thought those People of the other World, (as those who had sown the Knowledge of a great many Vices amongst their Neighbours and were much greater Masters in all kind of Mischief than they,) did not exercise this Sort of Revenge without Mystery, and that it must needs be more painful than theirs; and so began to leave their old Way, and to follow this. I am not forry that we should here take Notice of the barbarous Horror of so cruel an Action, but grieved that feeing so clearly into their Faults, we should be so blind to our own: For I conceive, there is more Barbarity in eating a Man alive, than when he is dead; in tearing a Body Limb from Limb, by Racks and Torments, that is yet in perfect Sense, in roasting it by Degrees, causing it to be bit and worried by Dogs and Swine, (as we have not only read, but lately feen; not amongst inveterate and mortal Enemies, but Neighbours, and fellow Citizens, and which is worse, under Colour of Piety and Religion,) than to roast and eat him after he is dead. Chrysippus, and Zeno, the two Heads of the Stoical Sect, were of Opinion, that there was no Hurt in making Use of our dead Carcasses, in what Kind foever, for our Necessity, and in feeding upon them too; as our Ancestors, who being besieg'd by Cafar in the City of Alexia, resolv'd to suitain the Famine of the Siege with the Bodies of their old Men, Women, and other Persons, who were incapable of bearing Arms.

Vascones (fama est) alimentis talibus usi, Produxere animas*.

'Tis faid the Gascons with such Meats as these, In Time of Siege their Hunger did appease.

And the Physicians make no Dissiculty of employing it to all Sorts of Use, that is, either to apply it outwardly, Vol. I. * Juvenal Sat. 15.

Or

or to give it inwardly for the Health of the Patient: But there never was any Opinion fo irregular, as to excel Treachery, Disloyalty, Tyranny and Cruelty, which are our familiar Vices. We may then call these People barbarous, in respect to the Rules of Reason: But not in the spect to ourselves, who in all Sorts of Barbarity exceed them. Their Wars are throughout noble and generous, and carry as much Excuse and fair Pretence, as their human Frailty is capable of; having with them no other Four dation, than the fole Jealoufy of Virtue. Their Difputs are not for the Conquests of new Lands, those they already possess, being so fruitful by Nature, as to supply them without Labour or Concern, with all Things necessary, in such Abundance, that they have no Need to enlarge their Borders. And they are moreover happy in this, that they only covet fo much as their natural Necessities require All beyond that is superfluous to them: Men of the fame Age generally call one another Brothers, those whom younger, Sons and Daughters, and the old Men are Father to all. These leave to their Heirs in common this in Possession of Goods, without any Manner of Division, a other Title, than what Nature bestows upon her Creature in bringing them into the World. If their Neighbon pass over the Mountains, and come to affault them, and obtain a Victory, all the Victors gain by it is Glory only, and the Advantage of having prov'd themselves the better in Valour and Virtue : For they never meddle will the Goods of the Conquer'd, but prefently return into the own Country, where they have no Want of any Thing necessary; nor of this greatest of all Goods, to know how to enjoy their Condition happily, and to be content. Am these in Turn do the same. They demand of their ?! foners no other Ranfom, than Acknowledgment that the are overcome: But there is not one found in an Age that will rather not chuse to die, than make such a Confesioni or either by Word or Look recede from the entire Gran deur of an invincible Courage. There is not a Manamone them, who had not rather be kill'd and eaten, than formed as to open his Mouth to intreat he may not. They of them with all Liberality and Freedom, to the End the Lives may be fo much the dearer to them: But frequently entertain them withal with Menaces of their approachus : But

excule

ch are

e bar-

in re-exceed is, and numan

Four-

isputes Iready

them

effary, enlarge is, that equire: e fame

/ho are

Father

nis ful

on, a eature,

hbous

m, and

Glory

ves the lle with

to their

Thing

ow how

t. Am

ieir Pri-

nat the ge that ifeffico;

e Gran

among fo much

hey then nd them equently

oachun

Death

Death, of the Torments they are to suffer, of the Preparations that are making in order to it, of the mangling their Limbs, and of the Feast that is to be made, where their Carcasses is to be the only Dish. All which they do to no other End, but only to extort some gentle or submissive Word from them, or to fright them so as to make them run away; to obtain this Advantage, that they were terrified, and that their Constancy was shaken; and indeed, if rightly taken, it is in this Point only that a true Victory does consist.

Quam quæ confessos animo quoque subjugat hostes t.

No Victory can be entire and true; But what does Minds as well as Limbs fubdue.

The Hungarians, a very warlike People, never pretended farther than to reduce the Enemy to their Discretion; for having forc'd this Confession from them, they let them go without Injury, or Ranfom, excepting at the most, to make them engage their Word, never to bear Arms against them again. We have several Advantages over our Enemies that are borrowed, and not truly our own; 'tis the Quality of a Porter, and no Effect of Virtue to have stronger Arms and Legs, 'tis a corporeal Quality to be active, 'tis an Exploit of Fortune to make our Enemy fumble, or to dazzle him with the Light of the Sun; 'tis a Trick of Science and Art, which may happen in a mean base Fellow, to be a good Fencer. The Estimate and Valour of a Man consist in the Heart, and in the Will, there his true Honour lives: Valour is Stability, not of Legs and Arms, but of the Courage and the Soul; it does not lye in the Valour of our Horse, or our Arms, but in ourselves. He that falls obstinate in his Courage, Si succiderit de genu pugnat*; If his Legs fail him, fights upon his Knees. He who for any Danger of apparent Death abates nothing of his Affurance, who dying, does yet dart at his Enemy a herce and difdainful Look, is overcome not by us, but by ‡ Claud. in Panegyr.

* Seneca Epist.

R 2

Fortune;

MONTAIGNE'S Estays.

236

Fortune; he is kill'd, not conquer'd; the most valiant, are fometimes the most unfortunate. There are also De feats triumphant to Emulation of Victories. Neither durst those four Sister-Victories, the fairest the Sun ever beheld, of Salamis, Platea, Mical, and Sicily, ever oppose all their united Glories, to the fingle Glory of the Discomfiture of King Leonidas, and his Army at the Pals of Thermopyle. Who ever ran with a more glorious Defire, and greater Ambition, to the winning, than the Captain Ischolas to the certain Loss of a Battle? Who could have found out a more subtle Invention to secure his Safety, than he did to affure his Ruin? He was fet to defenda certain Pass of Peloponnesus against the Arcadians, which confidering the Nature of the Place, and the Inequality of Forces, finding it utterly impossible for him to do, and concluding that all who were presented to the Enemy, must certainly be left upon the Place; and on the other Side, reputing it unworthy of his own Virtue, and Magna nimity, and of the Lacedæmonian Name, to fail in any Par of his Duty, he chose a Mean betwixt these two Extreme, after this Manner; the youngest and most active of his Men, he would preferve for the Service and Defence of their Country, and therefore fent them back; and will the rest, whose Loss would be of less Consideration, here folv'd to make good the Pass, and with the Death of them, to make the Enemy buy their Entry as dear as possibly he could: As it also fell out, for being presently encompassed on all Sides by the Arcadians, after having made a grad Slaughter of the Enemy, he and his Men were all cut it Pieces. Is there any Trophy dedicated to the Conqueron, which is not much more due to those who were overcome! The Part that true conquering is to play, lyes in the Encount ter, not in the coming off; and the Honour of Virus confifts in fighting, not in subduing.

But to return to my Story, these Prisoners are so fall from discovering the least Weakness, for all the Terror can be represented to them, that, on the contrary, during the two or three Months, that they are kept, they always appear with a chearful Countenance; importune their Masters to make Haste to bring them to the Test; dely rail at them, and reproach them with Cowardice, and the Number of Battles they have loft against those of their Country

liant,

o De-

either

n ever

er op-

of the e Pals

)esire,

aptain

d have

Safety,

which,

lity of

, and nemy,

e other lagnaly Part

remes,

of his nce of

d with

he re-

them,

bly he 1passed great

cut in uerors,

come ncour

Virtue

fo fat

Terrors

during

always

e their

; defy,

e, and of their ountry

Country. I have a Song made by one of these Prisoners, wherein he bids them come all, and dine upon him, and welcome, for they shall withal eat their own Fathers, and Grandfathers, whose Flesh has served to feed and nourish him. Those Muscles, fays he, this Flesh, and these Veins, are your own: Poor filly Souls as you are, you little think that the Substance of your Ancestors Limbs is here yet: But mind as you eat, and you will find in it the Taste of your own Flesh: In which Song there is to be observed, an Invention that relishes nothing of the Barbarian. Those, that paint these People dying after this Manner, represent the Prisoner spitting in the Face of his Executioners, and making at them a wry Mouth. And 'tis most certain, that to the very last Gasp, they never cease to brave and defy them both in Word and Gesture. In plain Truth, these Men are very savage in Comparison of us, and of Necessity, they must either be absolutely so, or else we are savager: For there is a vast Difference betwixt their Manners and ours.

The Men there have feveral Wives, and fo much the great Number, by how much they have the greater Reputation and Valour, and it is one very remarkable Virtue their Women have, that the fame Endeavour our Wives have to hinder and divert us from the Friendship and Familiarity of other Women, those employ to promote their Husbands Defires, and to procure them many Spouses; for being above all Things folicitous of their Husbands Honour, 'tis their chiefest Care to seek out and to bring in the most Companions they can, for asmuch as it is a Testimony of their Husbands Virtue. I know most of ours will cry out, that 'tis monstrous; whereas in truth, it is not fo; but a truly matrimonial Virtue; though of the highest Form. In the Bible, Sarah, Leab and Rachel, gave the most beautiful of their Maids to their Husbands; Livia preferred the Passion of Augustus to her own Interest; and the Wife of King Dejotarus of Stratonica did not only give up a fair young Maid, that ferv'd her, to her Hufband's Embraces, but moreover carefully brought up the Children he had by her, and affifted them in the Succession to their Father's Crown. And that it may not be suppos'd, that all this is done by a simple and servile Observation to their common Practice, or by any Authomative Impression of their ancient Custom, without Judgment, or Examination; and for having a Soul fo stupid, that it cannot contrive what else to do, I must here give you fome Touches of their Sufficiency, in point of Underflanding; besides what I repeated to you before, which was one of their Songs of War, I have another and a Love Song, that begins thus; Stay, Adder, flay, that by thy Pattern my Sister may draw the Fashion and Work of a noble Wreath, that I may present to my Beloved, by which Means thy Beauty, and the excellent Order of thy Scales, shall forever be preferr'd before all other Serpents. Wherein the first Couplet, Stay, Adder, &c. makes the Burthen of the Song. Now I have convers'd enough with Poetry to judge thus much: That not only, there is no Thing of barbarous in this Invention; but moreover, that I is perfectly Anacreontick; to which their Language 8 foft, of a pleafing Accent, and something bordering upon the Greek Terminations. Three of these People not for feeing how dear their Knowledge of the Corruptions of this Part of the World would one Day cost their Happines and Repose, and that the Effect of this Commerce would be their Ruin, as I presuppose it is in a very fair Way, (Miserable Men to suffer themselves to be deluded with Defire of Novelty, and to have left the Serenity of their own Heaven, to come fo far to gaze at ours,) came to Roat, at the Time that the late King Charles the Ninth was there: Where the King himself talk'd to them a good while, and they were made to fee our Fashions, our Pomp and the Form of a great City; after which, fome one ask'd their Opinion, and would know of them, what of all the Things they had feen, they found most to be ad mir'd? To which they made Answer, Three Things, of which I have forgot the Third, and am troubled at it; but two I yet remember. They faid, that in the first Place they thought it very strange, that so many tall Men wear ing Beards, ftrong and well arm'd, who were about the King, ('tis like they meant the Swifs of the Guard) fhould fubmit to obey a Child, and that they did not chuse out one amongst themselves to command: Secondly; (they have a way of Speaking in their Language, to call Men the half of one another,) that they had observed that there were amongst us, Men full and cramm'd with all manner of Conveniencies, whilst in the mean Time, their ipid,

R 3

Montaigne's Esfays.

238

give nderhich

nd a

at by of a

which

Shall

n the

of the

ry to hing

nat it

ge is upon fore-

ns 01

pinels

Would

Way,

with

Roan,
h was good Pomp, e one hat of

be adt; but Place

wear.

at the fhould

ise out

(they

Men

d that

th all their Halves

Halveswere begging at their Doors, lean, and half-starv'd with Hunger and Poverty; and thought it strange, that these necessitous Halves were able to suffer so great an Inequality and Injustice, and that they did not take the others by the Throats, or fet Fire to their Houses. I talk'd to one of them a great while together, but I had so ill an interpreter, and that was so perplex'd by his own Ignorance, to apprehend my Meaning, that I could get nothing out of him, of any Moment. Asking him, what Advantage he reapt from the Superiority he had amongst his own People? (for he was a Captain, and our Mariners call'd him King,) he told me, to march in the Head of them to War; and demanding of him farther, how many Men he had to follow him? he shewed me a Space of Ground, to fignify, as many as could march in fuch a Compass: Which might be four or five thoufand Men; and putting the Question to him, Whether or no his Authority expir'd with the War? he told me this remain'd; that when he went to visit the Village of his Dependance, they plain'd him Paths through the thick of their Woods, through which he might pass at his Ease. All this does not found very ill, and the last was not much amils; for they wear no Breeches.

MCHERED BURNEY

CHAP. XXXI.

That a Man is soberly to judge of divine Ordinances.

Things unknown are the principal and true Subject of Imposture, forasmuch as, in the first Place, their very Strangeness lends them Credit, and moreover, by not being subjected to our ordinary Discourse, they deprive us of the Means to question, and dispute them. For which Reason, says Plato, it is much more easy to satisfy the Hearers, when speaking of the Nature of the Gods, than of the Nature of Men, because the Ignorance of the Auditory affords a fair and large Career, and all Manner of R 4

MONTAIGNE'S Esfays.

240

Liberty in the handling of profane and abstruce Things; and then it comes to pass, that nothing is so firmly believ'd as what we least know: Nor any People so confident, as those who entertain us with fabulous Stories, such as your Alchymists, judicial Astrologers, Fortune-tellers, and Phyficians, Id genus omne; to which I could willingly, if I durk, join a Sort of People, that take upon them to interpret and controul the Defigns of God himself, making no Question of finding out the Cause of every Accident, and to pry into the Secrets of the divine Will, there to dilcover the incomprehenfible Motives of his Works. And although the Variety, and the continual Difcordance of Events, throw them from Corner to Corner, and tols them from East to West, yet do they still persist in their vain Inquifition, and with the fame Pencil to paint Black and White. In a Nation of the Indies, there is this commendable Custom, that when any Thing befals them amis in any Rencounter or Battle, they publickly ask Pardon of the Sun, who is their God, as having committed an unjust Action, always imputing their good or evil Fortune to the divine Justice, and to that, submitting ther own Judgment and Reason. 'Tis enough for a Christian to believe, that all Things come from God, to receive them with Acknowledgment of his divine and infcrottnable Wisdom, and also thankfully to accept and receive them, with what Face soever they may present themselves: But I do not approve of what I fee in use, that is, to leek to continue and support our Religion by the Prosperity of our Enterprises. Our Belief has other Foundation enough, without going about to authorife it by Events; For the People accustomed to such Arguments as these, and 10 proper to their own Tafte, it is to be fear'd, lest when they fail of Success, they should also stagger in their Faith; As in the War wherein we are now engag'd, upon the Ac count of Religion, those who had the better in the Butness of Rochelabeille, making great Brags of that Success, as an infallible Approbation of their Cause, when they came afterwards to excuse their Misfortunes of Jarnas, and Moncontour, 'twas by faying, they were fatherly Scourges and Corrections; if they have not a People wholly at their Mercy, they make it manifeftly enough to appear, what it is to take two Sorts of Grill out of the same Sack, and with the same Mouth to blow hot and cold. It were better to possess the Vulgar with the solid and real Foundations of Truth. 'Twas a brave naval Battle that was gained a few Months fince against the Turks, under the Command of Don John of Austria; but it has also pleased God at other Times to let us see as great Victories at our own Expence. In fine, 'tis a hard Matter to reduce divine Things to our Balance, without Waste, and losing a great deal of Weight. And he that would take upon him to give a Reason, why Arius, and his Pope Leo, the principal Heads of the Arian Herefy, should die at several Times of so like and strange Deaths, (for being withdrawn from the Disputation, by the Griping in the Guts, they both of them fuddenly gave up the Ghost upon the Stool,) and would aggravate this divine Vengeance by the Circumstances of the Place; might as well add the Death of Heliogabalus, who was also slain in a House of Office. But what? Iraneus was involved in the lame Fortune; God being pleased to shew us, that the Good have fomething elfe to hope for; and the Wicked something else to fear, than the Fortunes or Misfortunes of this World: He manages and applies them according to his own fecret Will and Pleasure, and deprives us of the Means, foolishly to make our own Profit. And those People both abuse themselves and us, who will pretend to dive into these Mysteries by the Strength of human Reaion. They never give one hit, that they do not receive two for it; of which St. Augustin gives a very great Proof upon his Adversaries. 'Tis a Conflict, that is more decided by Strength of Memory, than the Force of Reaion. We are to content ourselves with the Light it pleases the Sun to communicate to us, by Virtue of his Rays, and who will lift up his Eyes to take in a greater, let him not think it strange, if for the Reward of his Presumption, he there lose his Sight. Quis hominum potest scire consilium Dei? Aut quis poterit cogitare, quid velit Dominus *? Who among st Men can know the Counsel of God? Or who can think what the Will of the Lord is?

Judge soberly of divine Ordinances. 241

* Sapien. Cap. ix. v. 13.

CHAP.

ngs;

iev'd t, as your

Phy-

lurft, rpret

g no

and dif-

And te of them

vain

and rendamils

rdon

ed an For-their

iftian

ceive

cruti-ceive

Ives:

feek ty of

ugh,

r the

id to

when

aith:

eAc-

Buli-

ccess,

they

herly eople

ough out of 242

CHAP. XXXII.

That we are to avoid Pleasures even at the Expense of Life.

Had long ago observed most of the Opinions of the Ancients to concur in this, That it is happy to die, when there is more Ill than Good in Living, and that to preserve Life to our own Torment and Inconvenience, is contrary to the very Rules of Nature, as these old Laws instruct. us.

*Η ζῆν ἀλύπως ἢ θανεῖν εὐδαιμόνως, Καλὸν θνήσκειν οἶς ὕβείν τὸ ζῆν Φέρει, Κρεῖσσον τὸ μὴ ζῆν ἐκίν, ἢ ζῆν ἀθλίως.

Happy is Death, whenever it shall come, To him who lives in Pain Life's burthensom; For infinitely better 'tis to die, Than to prolong a Life of Misery.

But to push this Contempt of Death so far as to employ it to the removing ourselves from the Danger of covering Honours, Riches, Dignities, and other Favours, and Goods of Fortune, as we call them, as if Reason were not sufficient to persuade us to avoid them, without adding this new Injunction, I had never seen it, either enjoined or practised, till this Passage of Seneca fell into my Hands; who advising Lucilius, a Man of great Power and Authority about the Emperor, to alter his voluptuous and magnificent Way of Living, and to retire himself from this worldly Vanity and Ambition, to some solitary, quiet, and philosophical Life, and the other alledging some Dissiplications; I am of Opinion, says he, either that you leave that Life, or Life itself. I would indeed advise thee to the gentle Way, and to untie, rather than to break, the Knot thou haft indifcreetly knit, provided, that if it be not otherwise to be untied, then resolutely break it. There is no Man fo great a Coward, that had not rather once fall, than be always falling. I should have found this Counsel conformable enough to the stoical Roughness; but it appears the more strange, for being borrowed from Epicurus, who writes the fame thing upon the like Occasion to Idomeneus. And I think I have observed something like it, but with Christian Moderation, amongst our own People. St. Hilary, Bishop of Poictiers, that famous Enemy of the Arian Herefy, being in Syria, had Intelligence thither fent him, that Abra, his only Daughter, whom he left at Home under the Eye and Tuition of her Mother, was fought in Marriage by the greatest Nobleman of the Country, as being a Virgin virtuously brought up, fair, rich, and in the Flower of her Age: Whereupon he writ to her, (as it appears upon Record,) that she should remove her Affection from all those Pleasures and Advantages were proposed unto her; for he had in his Travels found out a much greater and more worthy Fortune for her, a Hufband of much greater Power and Magnificence, that would present her with Robes and Jewels of inestimable Value; wherein his Defign was, to dispossess her of the Appetite and Use of worldly Delights, to join her wholly to God: But the nearest and most certain Way to this, being, as he conceived, the Death of his Daughter; he never ceased, by Vows, Prayers and Oraisons, to beg of the Almighty, that he would please to call her out of this World, and to take her to himself; as accordingly it came to pass; for soon after his Return she died, at which he exprest a singular Joy. This seems to out-do the other, toralmuch as he applies himself to this Means at the first Sight, which they only take subsidiarily, and besides, it was towards his only Daughter. But I will not omit the latter End of this Story, though it be from my Purpose; St. Hilary's Wife having understood from him, how the Death of their Daughter was brought about, by his Dehres and Defign, and how much happier she was, to be removed out of this World, than to have stay'd in it, conceived so lively an Apprehension of the eternal and heavenly Beatitudes, that the begged of her Hulband with the extremest

Ex-

the die,

it to ence,

Jaws

ploy

and

Mele

ling

10

Who

ority

nifi.

ald.

and 価

ave

e to

the

extremest Importunity, to do as much for her; and God, at their joint Request, shortly after calling her to him, it was a Death embraced on both Sides, with singular Content.

SATE DE LO MONTE DE LO MANOR D

CHAP. XXXIII.

That Fortune is oftentimes observed to act by the Rule of Reason.

HE Inconstancy, and various Motions of Forture, may reasonably make us expect, she should present us with all Sorts of Faces. Can there be a more express Act of Justice than this? The Duke of Valentenois, having resolved to poison Cardinal Adrian Cornetto, with whom his Father, Pope Alexander the Sixth, and himself, were to go to Supper in the Vatican; he sent before a Bottle of poisoned Wine, and withal, strict Order to the Butlet to keep it very fafe. The Pope being come before his Son, and calling for Drink, the Butler supposing this Wine had not been so strictly recommended to his Care, but only upon the Account of it's Excellency, presented it immediately to the Pope, and the Duke himself coming in prefently after, and being confident they had not meddled with his Bottle, took also his Cup; so that the Father died immediately upon the Spot, and the Son, after having been long tormented with Sickness, was referred to another, and a worfe Fortune: Sometimes she seems to play upon us, just in the Nick of an Affair: Monsieur d' Estret, at that time Guidon to Monfieur de Vendosme; and Montieur de Liques, Lieutenant to the Duke of Arscot's Troop, being both Pretenders to the Sieur de Foungesfelles's Sitter, though of different Parties, (as it oft falls out amongst from tier Neighbours,) the Sieur de Liques carried her; but on the same Day he was married, and which was worle, before he went to Bed to his Wife, the Bridegroom having a Mind to break a Lance in Honour of his new Bride, went out to skirmish, near to St. Omers, where the Sieur d' Estree proving the Stronger, took him Prisoner, and the more to illustrate his Victory, the Lady herself was fain

Conjugis ante coacta novi dimittere collum, Quam veniens una, atque altera rursus hyems, Noctibus in longis avidum saturasset amorem*.

God,

n, it tent.

the tune, elent

pres

ving

hom

were ottle utler

his

Wine

but ed it

ning med-

Fa-

after

ed to play

Aree,

Mon-

roop, ifter,

ron-orfe,

ving went

$198

Of her fair Arms, the am'rous Ring to break, Which clung fo fast to her new Spouse's Neck, E're of two Winters many a friendly Night Had sated her Love's greedy Appetite.

to request him of Courtefy, to deliver up his Prisoner to her, as he accordingly did; the Gentlemen of France never denying any thing to the Ladies. Does she not seem to be an Artist here? Constantine, the Son of Hellen, founded the Empire of Constantinople; and so many Ages after, Constantine, the Son of Hellen, put an End to it. Sometimes the is pleased to emulate our Miracles. We are told that King Clouis besieging Angoulesme, the Walls fell down of themselves by divine Favour. And Bouchet has it from some Author, that King Robert having fat down before a City, and being stole away from the Siege, to keep the Fealt of St. Aignan at Orleans; as he was in Devotion at a certain Place of the Mass, the Walls of the beleaguered City, without any Manner of Violence, fell down with a sudden Ruin. But she did quite contrary in our Milan War; for Captain Rense laying Siege to the City of Verona, and having carried a Mine under a great Parcel of the Wall, the Mine being fprung, the Wall was lifted from it's Base, but dropt down again nevertheless whole and entire, and so exactly upon it's Foundation, that the Besieged suffered no Inconvenience by that Attempt. Sometimes she plays the Physician: Jason Phereus being given over by the Physicians, by Reason of a desperate Impolthumation in his Breast, having a Mind to rid himself of his Pain, by Death at least, in a Battle, threw himself desperately into the thickest of the Enemy, where he was to fortunately wounded quite through the Body, that the

* Catullus.

Imposthume

246 MONTAIGNE'S Effays.

Imposthume broke, and he was perfectly cured. Did the not also excel the Painter Protogenes in his Art? Who having finished the Picture of a Dog quite tired and out of Breath, in all the other Parts excellently well to his own liking, but not being able to express as he would the Slaver and Foam that should come out of his Mouth, vext and angry at his Work, he took his Spunge, which by cleaning his Pencils had imbibed feveral Sorts of Colours, and threw it in a Rage against the Picture, with an Intent utterly to deface it; when Fortune guiding the Spunge to hit just upon the Mouth of the Dog, it there performed what all his Art was not able to do. Does the not sometimes direct our Counsels, and correct them! Isabella, Queen of England, being to fail from Zealand into her own Kingdom, with an Army in Favour of her Son, against her Husband, had been lost, had she come into the Port she intended, being there laid wait for by the Enemy; but Fortune, against her Will, threw her mo another Haven, where she landed in Safety. And he who throwing a Stone at a Dog, hit and killed his Mother-in-Law, had he not Reason to pronounce thin Verse, Ταυτόματον ημών καλλίω βελεύεται*.

By this I fee,
Fortune will always better Aim than we.

Fortune has more Judgment than we. Icetes had contracted with two Soldiers to kill Timoleon at Adranon in Sicily. These Villians took their Time to do it, when he was affishing at a Sacrifice, who thrusting into the Crowd, as they were making Signs to one another, that now was a fit Time to do their Business, in steps a Third, who with a Sword takes one of them full drive over the Pate, lays him Dead upon the Place, and away he runs. Which the other seeing, and concluding himself discovered and lost, he runs to the Altar and begs for Mercy, promising to discover the whole Truth, which as he was doing, and laying * Meander.

open

Did

Who

out

o his

the

vext

by

Co.

with

r the

here

s the em!

d inher

come

or by into

he

his conn in n he owd,

vas 2

with lays the loft, ying

pen

CHAP. XXXIV.

Of one Defect in our Government.

vantages, than Experience only, and his own natural Parts, was nevertheless of a very clear Judgment, has formerly told me, that he once had Thoughts of endeavouring to introduce this Practice; that there might be in every City a certain Place assign'd, to which, such as stood in Need of any thing might repair, and have their Business entered by an Officer appointed for that Purpose; as for Example, I enquire for a Chapman to buy my Pearls: I enquire for one that has Pearls to sell: Such a one wants Company to go to Paris: Such a one enquires for one wants Company to go to Paris: Such a one enquires tor a Servant of such a Quality: Such a one for a Master; such a one enquires for fuch an Artificer, some for one Thing, tome for another, every one according to what he wants And doubtless these mutual Advertisements would be of no contemptible Advantage to the publick Correspondency and Intelligence: For there are evermore Conditions that hunt after one another, and for Want of knowing one another's Occasions, leave Men in very great Necessity. 1 have heard, to the great Shame of the Age we live in that in our very Sight, two most excellent Men for Learning died fo poor, that they had scarce Bread to put in their Mouths, Lilius Gregorius Giraldus in Italy, and & bastianus Castalio in Germany; and do believe, there are a thousand Men would have invited them into their Families, with very advantageous Conditions, or have relieved them where they were, had they known their Wants. The World is not fo generally corrupted but that I know a Man that would heartily wish the Estate his Ancestors have left him, might be employ'd, so long as it shall please Fortune to give him leave to enjoy it, to secure rare and remarkable Persons of any kind, whom Missortune someOf the Custom of wearing Clothes. 249 times persecutes to the last Degree, from the Danger of Necessity; and at least place them in such a Condition, that they must be very hard to please, if they were not contented. My Father in his economical Government had this Order, (which I know how to commend, but by no Means imitate,) which was, that besides the Day-book, or Memorial of the Houshold-Affairs, where the small Accounts, Payments and Disbursements, which do not require a Secretary's Hand, were entred, and which a Bailiff always had in Cuftody; he ordered him whom he kept to write for him, to keep a Paper Journal, and in it, to fet down all the remarkable Occurrences, and Day by Day the Memoirs of the Histories of his House; very pleasant to look over, when Time begins to wear Things out of Memory, and very useful sometimes to put us out of Doubt. when such a Thing was begun, when ended, what Courses were debated on, what concluded; our Voyages, Abfences, Marriages, and Deaths, the Reception of good or Ill News; the Change of principal Servants, and the like. An ancient Custom, which I think it would not be amiss for every one to revive in his own House; and I find I did very foolishly in neglecting the same.

CHAP. XXXV.

Of the Custom of wearing Clothes.

Whatever I shall say upon this Subject, I am of Necessity to invade some of the Bounds of Custom, so careful has she been to shut up all the Avenues. I was disputing with myself in this shivering Season, whether the Fashion of going naked in those Nations lately discovered, is imposed upon them, by the hot Temperature of the Air, as we say of the Moors and Indians, or whether it be the original Fashion of Mankind; Men of Understanding, for simuch as all Things under the Sun, as the Holy Writ declares, are subject to the same Laws, were wont in such Considerations as these, where we are to distinguish Vol. I.

Ad-

na-

ient,

had duce

very nich,

nave

Pur

my ch a s for fuch ants.

e of ency that an-

I

arnat in St.

re a ımieved

nts.

W 2

ave

OF-

re-

memes

MONTAIGNE's Esays.

250

the natural Laws from those that have been imposed by Man's Invention, to have Recourse to the general Polity of the World, where there can be nothing counterseited. Now all other Creatures being sufficiently surnished with all Things necessary for the Support of their Being, it is not to be imagined, that we only should be brought into the World in a defective and indigent Condition, and in such an Estate as cannot subsist without foreign Assistance; and therefore it is that I believe, that as Plants, Trees, and Animals, and all Things that have Life, are seen to be by Nature sufficiently clothed and covered, to defend them from the Injuries of Weather, Proptereaque ferè res omnes, aut corio sunt, Aut seta, aut conchis, aut callo, aut cortice testa*.

> Moreover all Things, or with Skin or Hair, Or Shell, or Bark, or Callous clothed are.

fo were we: But as those who by artificial Light put of that of the Day, fo we by borrowed Forms and Fallion have destroy'd our own. And 'tis plain enough to be less. that 'tis Custom only which renders that impossible, the otherwise is nothing so; for of those Nations who haven Manner of Knowledge of Clothing, some are situated un der the same Temperature that we are, and some in mod colder Climates. And besides, our most tender Parts at always exposed to the Air, as the Eyes, Mouth, Note and Ears; and our Country Labourers, like our Ancestors former Times, go with their Breafts and Bellies open Had we been born with a Necessity upon us of wearing Petticoats and Breeches, there is no Doubt, but Natur would have fortified those Parts she intended should bed posed to the Fury of the Seasons, with a thicker Skin, a The has done the Fingers Ends, and the Soles of the Feet And why should this feem hard to believe? I observe much greater Distance betwixt my Habit, and that of one of our Country Peafants, than betwixt his and a Man that has M other Covering but his Skin. How many Men, especially

* Lucret. 1. 4.

Of the Custom of wearing Clothes.

ed by

lity of feited.

15 not to the n fuch

; and

s, and be by them

put out

afhion

e feen,

e, that nave m ted ur

n much arts and

ofe and ftors in s open

Natur

kin,

he Feet

e of our

has to pecial

in 251

in Turky, go naked merely upon Account of Devotion? I know not who would ask a Beggar, whom he should see in his Shirt in the Depth of Winter, as brifk and frolick as he who goes muffled up to the Ears in Furs, how he is able to endure to go fo? Why, Sir, he might answer you, you go with your Face bare, and I am all Face. The Italians have a Story of the Duke of Florence's Fool, whom his Master asking, How being so thin clad, be was able to support the Cold, when he himself, warm wrapt up as he was, was bardly able to do it? Why, reply'd the Fool, use my Receipt, to put on all the Clothes you have at once, and you'll feel no more Cold than I. King Massinissa to an extreme old Age could never be prevailed upon to go with his Head covered, how cold, stormy, or rainy soever the Weather might be: Which also is reported of the Emperor Severus. Herodotus tells us, that in the Battles fought betwixt the Ægyptians and the Persians, it was observed, both by himself and others, that of those who were left dead upon the Place, the Heads of the Ægyptians were found to be, without Comparison, harder than those of the Persians, by Reason that the last had gone with their Heads always covered from their Infancy, first, with Biggins, and then with Turbans, and the others always shaved and open. And King Agesilaw observed to a decrepid Age, to wear always the same Clothes in Winter that he did in Summer. Cafar, fays Suetonius, marched always at the Head of his Army for the most Part on Foot, with his Head bare, whether it was Rain or Sun-shine, and as much is said of Hannibal, Excipere insanos imbres, Cælique ruinam*.

Bare Head to march in Snow, and when it pours Whole Cataracts of cold unwholesom Showers.

A Venetian, who has long lived in Pegu, and is lately returned from thence, writes, that the Men and Women of that Kingdom, though they cover all their other Parts, go always bare Foot, and ride so too. And Plato does very

* Silius It. 1, 6, 1.

earneftly

earnestly advise, for the Health of the whole Body, to give the Head and the Feet no other Clothing than what Nature has bestowed. He whom the Poles have elected for their King, fince our's left them, who is indeed one of the greatest Princes of this Age, never wears any Gloves, and for Winter, or whatever Weather can come, never wears any other Cap Abroad, than the fame he wears at Home. Whereas I cannot endure to go unbuttoned or untied; ou neighbouring Labourers would think themselves in Chains if they were so braced. Varro is of Opinion, that when it was ordained, we should be bare in the Presence of the Gods, and before the Magistrate, it was rather so ordered upon the Score of Health, and to inure us to the Injuries of Weather, than upon the Account of Reverence. And fince we are now talking of Cold, and Frenchmen used to wear Variety of Colours, (not I myfelf, for I feldom wear other than black or white, in Imitation of my Father let us add another Story of Capt. Martin du Bellay, who affirms, that in the Journey of Luxemburg, he faw luch a great Frost, that the Ammunition-Wine was cut will Hatchets and Wedges, was delivered out to the Soldiers by Weight, and that they carried it away in Balkets: And Ovid, Nudaque confistunt formam servantia testæ Vina, nec hausta meri, sed data frusta bibunt*;

Stript of it's Cask, retains the Figure still,
Nor do they Draughts, but Crusts of Bacchu swill.

At the Mouth of the Lake Mæotis, the Frosts are wery sharp, that in the very same Place where Mithridates Lieutenant had sought the Enemy dry-soot, and given then a notable Deseat, the Summer following he obtained out them a samous naval Victory. The Romans sought at a very great Disadvantage, in the Engagement they had with the Carthaginians near Placentia, by Reason, that they went on to charge with their Blood sixed, and their Limbs

* Ovid. Trift. 1.3. El. 12.

numbed

Of the Custom of wearing Clothes. 253

numbed with Cold. Whereas Hannibal had caused great Fires to be dispersed quite through his Camp to warm his Soldiers, and Oil to be distributed amongst them; to the End, that anointing themselves, they might render their Nerves more supple and active, and fortify the Pores against the Violence of the Air, and freezing Wind that raged in that Season. The Retreat the Greeks made from Babylon into their own Country, is famous for the Difficulties and Calamities they had to overcome. Of which this was one, that being encountered in the Mountains of Armenia, with a horrible Storm of Snow, they loft all Knowledge of the Country, and of the Ways, and being driven up, were a Day and a Night without eating or drinking, most of their Cattle died, many of themselves starved dead, several flruck blind with the Driving, and the Glittering of the Snow, many of them maimed in their Fingers and Toes, and many fliff and motionless with the Extremity of the-Cold, who yet had their Understanding entire. Alexander law a Nation, where they bury the Fruit Trees in Winter, to defend them from being destroy'd by the Frost, and we also may see the same. But concerning Clothes, the King of Mexico changed his Apparel four Times a Day, and never put them on more, employing those he left off, in his continual Liberalities and Rewards; nor was either Pot, Diff, or other Utenfil of his Kitchen or Table, ever ferved in twice.

S 3

CHAP.

give

Na-

for

the

and rears

ome.

100

f the lered

ies of

And

ed to wear

ther

who fuch

with dies

kets:

date's them dover t at a dwith t they Limbs

mbed

Montaigne's Esfays.

254

CHAP. XXXVI.

Of Cato the Younger.

Am not guilty of the common Error of judging and ther by myself. I easily believe that in another's Ha mour which is contrary to my own: And though I had myfelf engaged to one certain Form, I do not oblige other to it, as many do; but believe and apprehend a thouland Ways of Living, and contrary to most Men, more easily admit of Differences and Uniformity amongst us. 18 frankly, as any one would have me, discharge a Man from my Humours and Principles, and confider him according to his own particular Model. Though I am not continent myself, I nevertheless fincerely love, and approve the Comtinency of the Capuchins, and other religious Orders, and highly commend their Way of Living. I infinuate mylell by Imagination into their Place and Love, and honou them the more, for being other than I am. I very much define, that we may be cenfured every Man by himself, and would not be drawn into the Confequence of common by amples. My Weakness does nothing alter the Esteem! ought to have of the Force and Vigour of those who deferve it. Sunt qui nibil suadent, quam quod, se imitari poli confidunt *. There are those who persuade nothing but what they believe they can imitate themselves. Crawling upon the Slime of the Earth, I do not for all that cease to observe my in the Clouds the inimitable Height of fome heroick Souls: 'Tis a great deal for me to have my Judgment regularand right, if the Effects cannot be fo, and to maintain this to vereign Power at least free from Corruption: 'Tis some thing to have my Will right and good, where my Leg fail me. This Age wherein we live, in our Part of the

* Cicero de Orat.

World

Of Cato the Younger.

255

World at least, is grown so stupid, that not only Exercise, but the very Imagination of Virtue is defective, and seems to be no other but College-Fashion.

Lucum ligna *. Virtutem verba putant, ut

Words finely couch'd, these Men for Virtue take, As if each Word a facred Grove could make.

Quam wereri deberent, etiam si percipere non possent +. Which they ought to reverence, though they cannot comprehend. 'Tis a new Gew-gaw to hang in a Cabinet, or at the End of the Tongue, as on the Tip of the Ear, for Ornament only. There are no more virtuous Actions extant, and those Actions that carry a Shew of Virtue, have yet nothing of it's Effence; by Reason, that Profit, Glory, Fear and Custom, and other such like foreign Causes, put us in the Way to produce them. Our Justice also, Valour and good Offices, may then be called fo too, in Respect to others, and according to the Face they appear with to the Publick; but in the Doer it can by no Means be Virtue, because there is another End proposed, another moving Cause. Now Virtue owns nothing to be her's, but what is done by herfelf, and for herfelf alone. In that great Battle of Potidæa, which the Greeks, under the Command of Pausanias, obtained against Mardonius, and the Persians, the Conquerors, according to their Custom, coming to divide amongst them the Glory of the Exploit, they attributed to the Spartan Nation the Pre-eminence of Valour in this Engagement. The Spartans, great Judges of Virtue, when they came to determine to what particular Man of their Nation the Honour was due, of having best behaved himself upon this Occasion, found that Aristodemus had, of all others, hazarded his Person with the greatest Bravery; but did not however allow him any Prize or Reward, by Reafon that his Virtue had been incited by a Defire to clear his Reputation from the Reproach of his Miscarriage at the

* Horace Ep. 6. 1. 1. + Cicero Tuf. 1.
S 4 Bufin el

ano.

's He

I find

others eafily

Ias

from ording tinent

e Con-

, and nyfelf

lonour

much

if, and on Ex-

eem 1

ho de-

ri post

rubat

on the

rve up

Souls:

arand

his fo.

fome-

Legion Legi

World

. Business of Thermopylee, and with a Desire to die bravely. to wipe off that former Blemish. Our Judgments are ver fick, and obey the Humour of our depraved Manners. I observe most of the Wits of these Times pretend to lage nuity; by endeavouring to blemish and darken the Glow of the bravest and most generous Actions of former Ages, putting one vile Interpretation or another upon them, and forging and supposing vain Causes and Motives for those noble Things they performed. A mighty Subtilty indeed Give me the greatest and most unblemished Action that ever the Day beheld, and I will contrive a hundred planfible Drifts and Ends to obscure it: God knows, whoever will firetch them out to the full, what Diverfity of Images our internal Wills do fuffer under; they do not fo malicioully play the Cenfurers, as they do it ignorantly and rudely in all their Detractions. The fame Pains and Licence that others take to blemish and bespatter these illustreous Names, I would willingly undergo to lend thema Shoulder to raise them higher. These rare Images, that are cull'd out by the Confent of the wifest Men of all Ages, for the World's Example, I should endeavour to he nour anew, as far as my Invention would permit, in all the Circumstances of favourable Interpretation. And we are to believe, that the Force of our Invention is infinitely short of their Merit. 'Tis the Duty of good Men to draw Virtues as beautiful as they can, and there would be noth decency in the Case, should our Passion a little transports in Favour of so sacred a Form. What these People do to the contrary, they either do out of Malice, or by the Vice of confining their Belief to their own Capacity; or, which I am more inclined to think, for not having their Sight flrong, clear, and elevated enough, to conceive the Splendor of Virtue in her native Purity: As Plutarch complains, that in his Time some attributed the Cause of the younger Cato's Death to his Fear of Cafar, at which he seems very angry, and with good Reason: And by that a Man may guels how much more he would have been offended with those who have attributed it to Ambition; senseless People! He would rather have performed a handsom, jutt, and generous Action, and to have had Ignominy for his Reward, than for his Glory. That Man was in Truth a Pattern, ively,

rs. I

Inge-Glory

Ages,

i, and fe no-

that plauoever

nages

alici-

d Li-

uftri-

that of all to hon all

nd we nitely

draw

no In-ort W

do to

Vice

which

Sight

plenlains,

mger

very

may

with Peojult,

r his uth a tern,

Pattern, that Nature chose out to shew to what Height human Virtue and Constancy could arrive: But I am not capable of handling fo noble an Argument, and shall therefore only fet five Latin Poets together by the Ears, who has done best in the Praise of Cato; and inclusively for their own too. Now a Man well read in Poetry will think the two first, in Comparison of the others, a little flat and languishing; the third more vigorous, but overthrown by the Extravagancy of his own Force. He will then think, that there will be yet Room for one or two Gradations of Invention to come to the fourth; but coming to mount the Pitch of that, he will lift up his Hands for Admiration; the last, the first by some Space. (but a Space that he will fwear is not to be filled up by any human Wit) he will be aftonished, he will not know where he is. These are Wonders. We have more Poets than Judges and Interpreters of Poetry. It is easier to write an indifferent Poem, than to understand a good one. There is indeed a certain low and moderate Sort of Poetry, that a Man may well enough judge by certain Rules of Art; but the true, supreme and divine Poesy, is equally above all Rules and Reason. And whoever discerns the Beauty of it, with the most affured and most steady Sight, sees no more than the quick Reflection of a Flash of Lightning. This is a Sort of Poefy that does not exercise, but ravishes and overwhelms our Judgment. The Fury that possesses him who is able to penetrate into it, wounds yet a third Man by hearing him repeat it. Like a Loadstone, that not only attracts the Needle, but also infuses into it the Virtue to attract others. And it is more evidently eminent upon our Theatres, that the facred Inspiration of the Muses, having first stirred up the Poet to Anger, Sorrow, Hatred, and out of himself, to whatever they will, does moreover by the Poet possess the Actor, and by the Actor, consecutively all the Spectators. So much our Passions hang and depend upon one another. Poetry has ever had that Power over me from a Child, to transpeirce and transport me: But this quick Resentment that is natural to me, has been variously handled by Variety of Forms, not so much higher and lower, (for they were ever the highest of every kind) as differing in Colour. First, a gay and spritely Fluency,

258 MONTAIGNE'S Effays.

Fluency, afterwards a lofty and penetrating Subtilty; and lastly, a mature and constant Force. Their Names will better express them; Ovid, Lucan, Virgil. But our Poets are beginning their Career.

Sit Cato dum vivat fama vel Cæfar major *.

Whilst he shall live, eclipse great Gæsar's Name, fays one.

- Et invictum devicta Morte Catonem +.

Death being overcome, invincible, fays the Second. And the Third speaking of the Civil Wars betwixt Cæsar and Pompey;

Victrix causa Diis placuit, sed Victa Catoni |.

The conquering Cause, the conquer'd Cato loves.

And the Fourth upon the Praises of Cafar,

Et cuncta terrarum subjecta, Præter atrocem animum Catonis &.

And conquer'd all where-e'er his Eagle flew, But Cato's Mind, that nothing could fubdue.

And the Master of the Quire, after having set forth all the great Names of the greatest Romans, ends thus,

---- His danism jura Catonem ‡.

Great Cato giving Laws to all the reft.

* Mart. lib. 6. Epig. 32. + Manil. || Lucan. l. 1. 5 Hor. Car. lib. 2. Ode 1. # Eneid. l. 8.

CHAP.

We laugh and cry for the same Thing. 259

HALOCCIONALIA.

and will Poets

Civil

the

1.1.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

That we laugh and cry for the same Thing.

W HEN we read in History, that Antigonus was very much displeas'd with his Son, for presenting him the Head of King Pyrrbus his Enemy, newly slain, fighting against him, and that seeing it he wept; That Rene, Duke of Lorraine, also lamented the Death of Charles, Duke of Burgundy, whom he had himself deseated, and appear'd in Mourning at his Funeral: And that in the Battle of Auroy (which Count Monfort obtain'd over Charles de Blou, his Competitor, for the Dutchy of Brittany) the Conqueror meeting the dead Body of his Enemy, was very much afflicted at his Death: We must not presently cry out,

Et cosi aven che l'animo ciascuna, Sua Passion sotto el contrario manto, Ricopre, con la vista hor' chiara, hor' bruma*.

That every one, whether of Joy or Woe, The Passion of their Mind can palliate so, As when most griev'd, to shew a Count'nance clear, And melancholick, when best pleas'd t'appear.

When Pompey's Head was prefented to Cæfar, the Histories tell us, that he turned away his Face, as from a fad and unpleasing Object. There had been so long an Intelligence and Society betwixt them, in the Management of the publick Affairs, so great a Community of Fortunes, so many mutual Offices, and so near an Alliance, that this Countenance of his ought not to suffer under any Misinterpretation;

Petrarcha.

terpretation; or to be suspected for either salse or counterfeit, as this other seems to believe:

Tutumque putavit

Jam bonus esse socer, lachrymas non sonte cadentes
Esse Little gemitusque expressit pectore læto,
Non aliter manifesta putans abscondere mentis Gaudia, quam Lachrymas*.

"Twas fafe to be a pious Father-in-law,
He shed forc'd Tears, and from a joyful Breast, Fetch'd Sighs and Groans; conceiving Tears would be Conceal his inward Joy.

For though it be true, that the greatest Part of our Actions are no other than Vizor and Disguise, and yet may some times be real and true: That,

Hæredis fletus sub persona risus est 1.

The Heir's dissembled Tears behind the Skreen, Could one but peep, would joyful Smiles be seen.

So it is, that in judging of these Accidents we are to consider how much our Souls are oftentimes agitated with divent Passions. And as they say, that in our Bodies there is a Congregation of divers Humours, of which, that is the So vereign, which according to the Complexion we are of, is commonly most predominant in us: So, though the Soulhas in it divers Motions to give it Agitation; yet must therefore Necessity be one to over-rule all the rest, though not with the necessary and absolute a Dominion, but that through the Flexibility and Inconstancy of the Soul, those of less Authority may, upon Occasion, reassume their Place, and make a little Sally in Turn. Thence it is that we see not only Children, who innocently obey, and follow Nature, often laugh and cry at the same Thing: But not one of us can

* Lucret. lib. 9.

‡ Aulus Gelli. Noct.

boalt

We laugh and cry for the same Thing. 261

com.

d best

fome-

nfider

divers

Cone So

of, is ul has ereof

ith fo

h the uthomake only often is can boaft,

boast, what Journey soever he may have in Hand, that he has the most set his Heart upon, but when he comes to part with his Family and Friends, he will find something that troubles him within; and though he refrains his Tears, yet he puts Foot i'th' Stirrup, with a sad and cloudy Countenance, and what gentle Flame soever may have warm'd the Heart of modest, and well-born Virgins, yet are they sain to be forc'd from about their Mothers Necks, to be put to Bed to their Husbands, whatever this boon Companion is pleas'd to say;

Estne novis nuptis odio Venus, anne parentum Frustrantur falsis gaudia lachrymalis, Ubertim Thalami quas intra limina fundunt?
Non, ita me Divi, vera gemunt, juverint*.

Does the fair Bride the Sport so mainly dread, That she takes on so when she's put to Bed? Her Parents Joys t'allay with a feign'd Tear, She does not cry in Earnest, I dare swear.

Neither is it strange to lament a Person, whom a Man would by no Means wish to be alive: When I rattle my Man, I do it with all the Mettle I have, and load him with no feign'd, but downright real Curses; but the Heat being over, if he should stand in Need of me, I should be very ready to do him Good: For I instantly turn the Leaf. When I call him Calf and Coxcomb, I do not pretend to entail those Titles upon him for ever; neither do I think I give myself the Lie in calling him an honest Man presently after. Were it not the Sign of a Fool to talk to one's felf, there would hardly be a Day or Hour wherein I might not be heard to grumble, and mutter to myself, and against myself, Turd in the Fool's Teeth, and yet I do not think that to be my Character. Who for feeing me one while cold, and presently very kind to my Wife, believes the one or the other to be counterfeit, is an Ass. Nero taking Leave of his Mother, whom he sent to be drown'd, was

* Catul. Numb. 67.

nevernevertheless sensible of some Emotion at this Farewel, and was struck with Horror and Pity. 'Tis faid, that the Light of the Sun is not one continuous Thing, but that he darts new Rays so thick one upon another, that we cannot perceive the Intermission.

Largus enim liquidi fons luminis æthereus Sol Irrigat assidue cælum candore recenti, Suppetit atque novo confessim lumine lumen*.

For the æthereal Sun that shines so bright, Being a Fountain large of liquid Light, With fresh Rays sprinkles still the chearful Sky, And with new Light the Light does still supply.

Just so the Soul variously and imperceptibly darts out her Passions. Artabarus surprising once his Nephew Xerxu, chid him for the sudden Alteration of his Countenance. As he was confidering the immeasurable Greatness of his Forces passing over the Hellespont, for the Grecian Expedition, he was first seiz'd with a Palpitation of Joy, to see so many Millions of Men under his Command, which also appeared in the Gaiety of his Looks: But his Thoughts at the fame Instant suggesting to him, that of so many Lives, there would not be one left, in a Century at most, he presently knit his Brows, and grew fad, even to Tears. We have resolutely pursu'd the Revenge of an Injury receiv'd, and been sensible of a singular Satisfaction at the Victory: But we shall weep notwithstanding: 'Tis not for the Victory, that we shall weep; there is nothing alter'd by that: But the Soul looks upon Things with another Eye, and repreients them to itself with another kind of Face; for every Thing has many Faces, and feveral Afpects, Relations, old Acquaintance, and Friendships, possess our Imaginations, and make them tender for the Time: But the Counterturn is fo quick, that 'tis gone in a Moment.

Nil à Deo fieri celeri ratione videtur, Qua si mens fieri proponit, & inchoat ipsa.

* Lucret. 1. 5.

Ocius

Ocius ergo animus quam res se perciet ulla, Ante oculos quarum in promptu natura videtur *.

and it the

at he can-

her

rxes, As orces he nany

ame

here

ntly have and

But

ory,

But

pre-rety

ons,

ina-

JUII-

cius

No Motions feem fo brisk, and quick as those The working Mind does to be done propose. Which once propos'd, her violent Motions are Swifter than any Thing we know by far.

And therefore, while we would make one continued Thing of all this Succession of Passion, we deceive ourselves. When Timoleon laments the Murther he had committed upon so mature and generous Deliberation, he does not lament the Liberty restor'd to his Country, he does not lament the Tyrant, but he laments his Brother: One Part of his Duty is perform'd, let us give him Leave to perform the other.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Of Solitude.

Lactive and the folitary Life, and as for the fine Saying, with which Ambition and Avarice palliate their Vices, That we are not born for our Selves, but for the Publick, let us boldly appeal to those who are most interested in publick Affairs, let them lay their Hands upon their Hearts, and then say, whether, on the contrary, they do not rather aspire to Titles and Offices, and that Tumult of the World, to make their private Advantage at the publick Expence. But we need not ask them the Question; for the corrupt Ways by which they arrive at the Height to which their Ambitions aspire, do manifestly enough

* Lucret. 1. 3.

declare declare that their Ends cannot be very good. Let us then tell Ambition, that it is she herself that gives us a Taske of Solitude; for what does she so much avoid as Society? What does she so much seek as Elbow-room? A Man may do well, or ill every where: But if what Bias says be true, that the greatest Part is the worse, or what the Preacher says, that there is not one good of a Thousand;

264

Rari quippe boni numero vix sunt totidem quot Thebarum portæ vel divitis ostia Nili +.

Because the Number of the Good's as few As Thebes fair Gates, or rich Nile Mouths do spew.

The Contagion is very dangerous in the Crowd. A Man must either imitate the Vicious, or hate them: Bothate dangerous, either to refemble them, because they are many, or to hate many, because they are unresembling And Merchants that go to Sea are in the Right, when they are cautious that those who embark with them in the same Bottom, be neither dissolute Blasphemers, nor vicious otherways; looking upon fuch Society as unfortunate. And therefore it was, that Bias pleasantly said to some, who being with him in a dangerous Storm, implor'd the Assistance of the Gods, Peace, speak softly, said he, that they may not know you are here in my Company: And of more pressing Example, Albuquerque Vice-Roy in the India for Emanuel King of Portugal, in an extreme Peril of Shipwreck, took a young Boy upon his Shoulders, for this only End, that in the Society of their common Danger, his Innocency might serve to protect him, and to recommend him to the divine Favour, that they might get fale to Shore: 'Tis not that a wife Man may not live every where content, either alone, or in the Crowd of a Palace: But if it be left to his own Choice, he will tell you, that he would fly the very Sight of the latter; he can endure it if need be; but if it be referred to him, he will chute † Juven. Sat. 13.

then

iety?

Man

fays

what hou-

W.

Man

are are ling.

n the

cious

nate.

the

that note

l of this

ger,

omfafe very ice:

ure

ule

the

the first. He cannot think himself sufficiently rid of Vice. if he must yet contend with it in other Men: Charondas punish'd those for ill Men, who were convict of keeping ill Company. There is nothing so unsociable, and sociable as Man, the one by his Vice, the other by his Nature. And Antisthenes, in my Opinion, did not give him a fatisfactory Answer, who reproach'd him with frequenting ill Company, by faying, That the Physicians liv'd well enough amongst the Sick: For if they contribute to the Health of the Sick, no doubt, but by the Contagion, continual Sight of, and Familiarity with Diseases, they must of Necessity impair their own. Now the End I suppose is all one, to live at more Leisure, and at greater Eafe: But Men do not always take the right Way; for they often think they have totally taken Leave of all Business when they have only exchang'd one Employment for another. There is little less trouble in governing a private Family, than a whole Kingdom: Wherever the Mind is perplex'd, it is in an entire Disorder, and domestick Employments are not less troublefom, for being less important. Moreover, for having shak'd off the Court and publick Employments, we have not taken Leave of the principal Vexations of Life.

--- Ratio & prudentia curas, Non locus effusi late maris arbiter aufert §.

Reason and Prudence, our Affections ease, Not remote Voyages on unknown Seas.

Our Ambition, our Avarice, Irrefolution, Fears, and inordinate Defires, do not leave us when we forfake our native Country:

Et post equitem sedet atra cura *.

And who does mount his Horse to this, will find, He carries Black-brow'd Madam Care behind.

§ Hor. lib. 1. Epist. 11. * Hor. lib. 3. Ode 1. She 266

She often follows us even to Cloisters, and philosophical Schools'; nor Deserts, nor Caves, Hair-shirts, nor Falls, can disengage us from her:

Hæret lateri lethalis arundo*.

The fatal Shaft flicks to the wounded Side.

One telling Socrates, that such a one was nothing improv'd by his Travels. I very well believe it, said he, for he took himself along with him.

Quid terras alio calentes Sole mutamus? patria quis exul Se quoque fugit †.

To change our native Soil, why should we run To seek out one warm'd by another Sun? For yet what banish'd Man could ever find, When farthest sent, he lest himself behind?

If a Man do not first discharge both himself and his Mind, of the Burden with which he finds himself oppress, Motion will but make it press the harder, and sit the heavier, as the Lading of a Ship is of less Incumbrance, when sat, and bestow'd in a settled Posture; you do a sick Man more Harm than Good, in removing him from Place to Place; you six and establish the Disease by Motion, as Stoop dive deeper into the Earth by being mov'd up and down in the Place where they are design'd to stand. And therefore it is not enough to get remote from the Public; is not enough to shift the Soil only, a Man must sly from the popular Dispositions that have taken Possession of his Soul, he must sequester and ravish himself from himself.

Rupi jam vincula, dicas, Nam luctata canis nodum arripit, attamen illa Cum fugit, à collo trahitur pars longa catenæ §.

* Virg. Æn. l. 4. § Perseus Sat. 5. + Hor. lib. 2. Ode 16.

Thoul't

hical

Tafts.

im-

e, for

Aind,

resid,

avier,

n faft,

more lace;

stoops

down therec; 'tis from of his rfelf.

de 16.

houl't

Thoul't say perhaps, that thou hast broke the Chain, Why, so the Dog has knaw'd the Knot in twain That ty'd him there, but as he slies, he feels The pond'rous Chain still rattling at his Heels.

We still carry our Fetters along with us; 'tis not an absolute Liberty; we yet cast back a kind Look upon what we have left behind us; the Fancy is still full of our old way of Living.

-Niss purgatum est pectus, quæ prælia nobis; Alque pericula tunc ingratis insinuandum? Quantæ conscindunt hominum cupidinis acres Sollicitum curæ, quantique perinde timores? Quidve superbia, spurcitia, at petulantia quantas Efficiunt clades, quid luxus, desidiesque*.

Unless the Mind be purg'd, what Conflicts streight And Dangers will it not infinuate? The lustful Man how many bitter Cares, Do gall, and fret, and then how many Fears? What horrid Mischiess, what dire Slaughters too Will not Pride, Lust, and Petulancy do? And what from Luxury can we expect, And Sloth; but all the Ill, Ill can effect?

The Mind itself is the Disease, and cannot escape from itself;

In culpa est animus, qui se non effugit nunquam*.

Still in the Mind the Fault does lye, That never from itself can fly.

and therefore is to be call'd home, and confin'd within it felf; that is the true Solitude, and that may be enjoy'd

* Lucret. 1. 5. + Hor. 1. 1. Ep. 14. even.

268 even in populous Cities, and the Courts of Kings, though more commodiously apart.

Now fince we will attempt to live alone, and to wave all Manner of Conversation amongst Men, let us so order it, that our Contentation may depend wholly upon ourfelves, and diffolve all Obligations that ally us to others: Let us obtain this from ourfelves that we may live alone in good Earnest, and live at our Ease too. Stilpo having escapid from the Fire that confum'd the City where he liv'd, and where he had his Wife, Children, Goods, and every Thing he was Master of, destroy'd by the Flame; Demetrius Poliorcetes feeing him, in fo great a Ruin of his Country, appear with so ferene and undisturb'd a Countenance, ask'd him, if he had receiv'd no Loss? To which he made Answer, No; and that, Thanks be to God, nothing was loft of his; which also was the Meaning of the Philosopher Antithenes, when he pleasantly said, that Men should only for nish themselves with such Things as would swim, and might with the Owner escape the Storm; and certainly a wife Man never lofes any Thing, if he has himfelf. When the City of Nola was ruin'd by the Barbarians, Paulinu who was Bishop of that Place, having there lost all he had and himself a Prisoner, pray'd after this Manner, O Lord, defend me from being sensible of this Loss; for thou known, they have yet touched nothing of that which is mine; The Riches that made him rich, and the Goods that made him good, were still kept entire. This it is to make Choice of Treasures, that can secure themselves from Plunder and Violence, and to hide them in fuch a Place, into which m one can enter, and that are not to be betrayed by any but ourselves. Wives, Children, and Goods must be had, and especially Health, by him that can get it; butwear not so to set our Hearts upon them, that our Happinell must have it's Dependance upon any of these; we must referve a Back-shop, a With-drawing-Room, wholly out own, and entirely free wherein to fettle our true Liberty, our principal Solitude and Retreat. And in this, we must for the most Part entertain ourselves with ourselves, and fo privately, that no Knowledge or Communication, of any exotick Concern, be admitted there, there to laugh and to talk, as if without Wife, Children, Goods, Train, ugh wave

order

our-ne in ap'd and hing

Poli-

pear

him, (wer,

oft of

Antif-

y fur-

and nly 2

When

ulinu

e had

Lord,

owell,

The

e him

ice of

r and ichm

y but had,

we are pinels

e mot

ly out berty

s, we felves,

cation,

laugh Train, or Attendance; to the End, that when it shall so fall out, that we must lose any, or all of these, it may be no new thing to be without them. We have a Mind pliable of itself, that will be Company; it has wherewithal to attack, and to defend, to receive and to give: Let us not then sear in this Solitude, to languish under an uncomfortable Vacancy.

In solis sis tibi turba locis.

In folitary Places be Unto thyfelf good Company.

Virtue is fatisfied with herfelf, without Discipline, without Words, without Effects. In our ordinary Actions, there is not one of a Thousand that concerns ourselves: He that thou feeft fcambling up the Ruins of that Wall, turious and transported, against whom so many Musket Shot are levell'd; and that other all over Scars, pale, and tainting with Hunger, and yet refolv'd rather to die, than to open his Gate to him, dost thou think that these Men are there upon their own Account? No, peradventure in the Behalf of one whom they never faw, and that never concerns himself for their Pains, and Danger, but lyes wallowing the while in Sloth and Pleafure: This other blear-ey'd, flovenly Fellow, that thou feeft come out of his Study after Midnight, dost thou think he has been tumbling over Books, to learn how to become a better Man, wifer and more content: No fuch Matter, he will there end his Days, but he will teach Posterity the Measure of Plautus's Verses, and the Orthography of a Latin Word: Who is it that does not voluntarily exchange his Health, his Repose, and his very Life for Reputation, and Glory? The most useless, frivolous, and false Coin that passes current amongst us: Our own Death does not sufficiently terrify, and trouble us, let us moreover charge ourselves with those of Wives, Children, and Family: Our own Affairs do not afford us Anxiety enough, let us undertake those of our Neighbours and Friends, still more to break our Brains, and to torment us.

T 3

Vab

Montaigne's Esfays.

270

Vah quemquamne hominem in animum instituere aut Parare, quod sit charius, quam ipse est sibi * ?

Alas? What Mortal will be so unwise Any Thing dearer than himself to prize?

Solitude feems to me to have the best Pretence in such as have already employed their most active and slourishing Age in the World's Service; by the Example of Ibalia. We have lived enough for others, let us at least live out the fmall Remnant of Life for our Selves; let us now call inou Thoughts and Intentions to our Selves, and to our own Ease, and Repose: 'tis no light Thing to make a sure Retreat, it will be enough to do without mixing other Enterprises and Designs, since God gives us Leisure to prepare for, and to order our Remove, let us make ready pack up our Baggage, take Leave betimes of the Company; let us disentangle ourselves from those violent Importunities that engage us elsewhere, and separate us from ourselves: We must break the Knot of our Obligations, how strong soever, and hereafter love this, or that; but espouse nothing, but ourselves: That is to say, let the Remainder be our own, but not so join'd and close, as not to be forc'd away without flaying us, or tearing Part of the whole Piece. The greatest Thing in the World is for a Man to know, that he is his own: 'Tis Time to wear ourselves from Society, when we can no more add any Thing to it; and who is not in a Condition to lend, must forbid himself to borrow. Our Forces begin to fall as and are of no more Use for foreign Offices; let us call them in, and lock them up at Home; He that can within himself cast off, and disband the Offices of so many Friendships, and that Tumult of Conversation he has contracted in the busy World, let him do it: In this Decay of Nature, which renders him useless, burthenlow, and importunate to others, let him have a Care of being useless, burthensom, and importunate to himself: Let him footh, and carefs himfelf, and above all Things be fure to govern himself with Reverence to his Reason and

* Ter. Adel. AS. 1. Sc.

Conscience.

Conscience, to that Degree, as to be asham'd to make a false Step in their Presence. Rarum est enim, ut satis se quisque vereatur | . For 'tis rarely seen that Men have Respect, and Reverence enough for themselves. Socrates fays, that Boys are to cause themselves to be instructed, Men to exercise themselves in well doing, and old Men to retire from all Civil and military Employments, living at their own Difcretion, without the Obligation to any certain Office. There are some Complexions more proper for these Precepts of Retirement, than others, fuch as are of a foft and faint Apprehension, and of a tender Will, and Affection, as I am, will fooner enline to this Advice, than active and bufy Souls, who embrace all, engage in all, and are hot upon every Thing, who offer, present, and give themselves up to every Occasion. We are to serve ourselves with these accidental and extraneous Things, fo far as they are pleafant to us, but by no Means to lay our principal Foundation there. This is no true one, neither Nature nor Reason can allow it so to be, and why therefore should we contrary to their Laws, enflave our own Contentment, by giving it into the Power of another? To anticipate also the Accidents of Fortune, and to deprive ourselves of those Things we have in our own Power, as several have done upon the Account of Devotion, and some Philosophers by Discourse; a Man to be his own Servant, to lye hard, to put out his own Eyes, throw Wealth into the River, and to feek out Grief, (the one by the Uneafiness and Misery of this Life, to pretend to Bliss in another; the other by laying himself low, to avoid the Danger of falling) are Acts of an excessive Nature. The stoutest and most obstinate Natures, render even their most abstruse Retirements glorious and exemplary.

—Tuta, & parvula laudo,
Cum res deficiunt, satis inter vilia fortis:
Verum ubi quid melius contigit, & unctius idem
Hos supere, & solos aio bene vivere, quorum Conspicitur nitidis fundata pecunia villis*.

| Pythag.

* Hor. l. 1. Epift. 15.

Where

h as hing

ales.

10UI

own fure

ther

e to

eady

om-

Im-

rom

ions,

but

Re

not rt of s for

vean

any must

US,

call can has

De-

om,

eing

s be and 100,

Where Plenty fails,
A secure Competency I like well,
And love the Man Disaster cannot quell:
But when good Fortune with a liberal Hand
Her Gifts beslows; those Men I understand Alone happy to live, and to be wise,
Whose Money does in neat built Villa's rife.

A great deal less would serve my Turn well enough. 'Tis enough for me under Fortune's Favour to prepare myself for her Difgrace, and being at my Ease to represent tomyfelf, as far as my Imagination can stretch, the Ill to come; as we do at Justs, and Tiltings, where we counterfeit War in the greatest Calm of Peace. I do not think Arcesilans the Philosopher, the less temperate and reform'd for knowing that he made Use of Gold, and Silver Vessels, when the Condition of his Fortune allow'd him fo to do: But have a better Opinion of him, than if he had deny'd himself what he us'd with Liberality and Moderation. I fee the utmost Limits of natural Necessity, and considering a poor Man begging at my Door oft-times more jocund and more healthy than I myself am, I put myself into his Place, and attempt to drefs my Mind after his Mode; and running in like Manner over other Examples, though I fancy Death, Poverty, Contempt, and Sickness treading on my Heels, I easily resolve not to be affrighted; though a less than I am takes them with so much Patience, I am not willing to believe that a less Understanding can do more than a greater; or that the Effects of Precept cannot arrive to as great a Height, as those of Custom: And knowing of how uncertain Duration these accidental Conveniencies are, I never forget, in the Height of all my Enjoyments, to make it my chiefest Prayer to Almighty God, that he will please to render me content with myfelf, and the Condition wherein he has placed me. I see feveral young Men very gay, and frolick; who nevertheless keep a Provision of Pills in their Trunk at home, to take when the Rheum shall fall, which they fear so much the lefs, because they think they have Remedy at Hand: Every one should do the same, and moreover if they find themselves themselves subject to some more violent Disease, should furnish themselves with such Medicines as may numb and supisy the Part: The Employment a Man should chuse for a sedentary Life, ought neither to be a laborious, nor an unpleasing one, otherwise tis to no Purpose at all to be retir'd: And this depends upon every one's Liking and Humour; mine has no Manner of Complacency for Husbandry, and such as love it, ought to apply themselves to it with Moderation.

Conantur sibi res, non se submittere rebus *.

Cis elf

ar

ens for ls,

'd

I ng nd to e; h gh m do ot d

ty y-ee r-e, h

A Man should to himself his Business sit, But should not to Affairs himself submit.

Hulbandry is otherwise a very servile Employment, as Sallust tells us; though some Parts of it are more excusable than the rest, as the Care of Gardens, which Zenophon attributes to Cyrus, and a Mean may be found out betwixt fordid and homely Affection, so full of perpetual Solitude, which is seen in Men who make it their entire Business and Study, and that stupid and extreme Negligence, letting all Things go at Random, we see in others.

Cultaque, dum peregre est animus sine corpore velox f.

Democritus's Cattle spoils his Corn, Whilst he from thence on Fancy's Wings is born.

But let us hear what Advice the younger Pliny gives his Friend † Cornelius Rufus, upon the Subject of Solitude; ladvise thee, in the plentiful Retirement wherein thou art, to leave to thy Hinds and inferior Servants the Care of thy Husbandry, and to addict thyself to the Study of Letters, to extract from thence something that may be entirely and absolutely thine own. By which, he means Reputation; like Cicero, who says, that he would employ his Solitude

^{*} Hor. Ep. 1. + Hor. Ep. 12. ‡ Caninius Rufus. and and Retirement from publick Affairs, to acquire by his Writings an immortal Life.

Scire tuum nihil est, nist te scire hoc sciat alter*?

Is all thy Learning nothing, unless thou, That thou art knowing, make all others know?

It appears to be Reason, when a Man talks of retiring from the World, that he should look quite out of himself. These do it but by Halves. They defign well enough for themfelves, 'tis true, when they shall be no more in it; but fill they pretend to extract the Fruits of that Defign from the World, when absented from it, by a ridiculous Contradic tion. The Imagination of those who seek Solitude, upon the Account of Devotion, filling their Hopes with Certainty of divine Promises in the other Life, is much more to tionally founded. They propose to themselves God, at infinite Object in Goodness and Power. The Soul has there wherewithal, at full Liberty, to fatiate her Dehres Afflictions and Sufferings turn to their Advantage, being undergone for the Acquisition of an eternal Health, and everlasting Joys. Death is to be wished and longed for, where it is the Paffage to fo perfect a Condition. And the Tartness of these severe Rules they impose upon themselves, is immediately taken away by Cuftom, and all their carnal Appetites baffled and fubdued, by refufing to humour and feed them; they being only supported by Use and Exercise. This fole End therefore of another happy and immortal Life, is that which really merits, that we should abandon the Pleasures and Conveniencies of this. And who can really and constantly enstame his Soul with the Ardour of this lively Faith and Hope, does erect for himself in this Solitude a more voluptuous and delicious Life, than any other Sort of Living whatever. Neither the End then, nor the Means of this Advice of Pliny pleases me, for we often all out of the Frying-pan into the Fire. This Book-Employ

* Per. Sat. 1.

ment

by his

from

Thele

them-

at fill

m the radic-

, upon rtain-

re 12.

id, an il has efires,

being

, and

d for,

nd the felves,

camal

er and ercile.

nortal

on the really f this

Soliother

or the en fall

ment

ment is as painful as any other, and as great an Enemy to Health, which ought to be the first Thing in every Man's Prospect; neither ought a Man to be allured with the Pleafure of it, which is the same that destroys the wary, avaricious, voluptuous and ambitious Men. The Wife give us Caution enough to beware of the Treachery of our Defires, and to distinguish true and entire Pleasures from such as are mixed and complicated with greater Pain. For the greatest Part of Pleasures (say they) wheedle and caress only to strangle us, like those Thieves whom the Ægygtians called Philiste; and if the Head-Ach should come after Drunkenness, we should have a Care of drinking too much: But Pleasure to deceive us, marches before, and conceals her Train. Books are pleasant, but if by being over studious we impair our Health, and spoil our good Humour, two of the best Pieces we have, let us give it over; for I for my Part am one of those who think, that no Fruit derived from them can recompense so great a Loss. As Men who feel themselves weakned by a long Series of Indisposition, give themselves up at last to the Mercy of Medicine, and submit to certain Rules of Living, which they are for the future never to transgress; so he who retires, weary of, and disgusted with, the common Way of Living, ought to model this new one he enters into, by the Rules of Reason, and to institute and establish it by Premeditation, and after the best Method he can contrive. He ought to have taken Leave of all Sorts of Labour, what Advantage foever he may propose to himself by it; and generally to have shaken offall those Passions which disturb the Tranquillity of Body and Soul, and then chuse the Way that best suits with his own Humour:

Unusquisque sua noverit ire via *.

Every one best doth know, In his own Way to go.

In Menagery, Study, Hunting, and all other Exercises, Men are to proceed to the utmost Limits of Pleasure; but

* Propert. lib. Eleg. 25.

must

MONTAIGNE'S Esfays.

276

must take Heed of engaging farther, where Solitude and Trouble begin to mix. We are to reserve so much Employment only, as is necessary to keep us in Breath, and to desend us from the Inconveniencies, that the other Extreme, of a dull and stupid Laziness, brings along with it. There are some steril, knotty Sciences, and chiefly hammered out for the Crowd; let such be left to them who are engaged in the publick Service: I for my Part care for no other Books, but either such, as are pleasant and easy, to delight me, or those, that comfort and instruct me, how to regulate my Life and Death.

Tacitum sylvas inter reptare salubres, Curantem quidquid dignum sapientem bonoque est*.

Silently Meditating in the Groves What best, a wise and honest Man behoves.

Wiser Men propose to themselves a Repose wholly spiritual, as having great Force and Vigour of Mind; but for me, who have a very ordinary Soul, I find it very necessary, to support myself with bodily Conveniences; and Age having of late deprived me of those Pleasures that were most acceptable to me, I instruct and whet my Appetite to those that remain, and are more suitable to this other Season. We ought to hold with all our Force, both of Hands and Teeth, the Use of the Pleasures of Life, that our Years, one after another, snatch away from us.

Quod vivis, cinis, & manes, & fabula fies +.

Let us enjoy Life's Sweets, for shortly we, Ashes, pale Ghosts, and Fables, all shall be.

Now as to the End that Pliny and Cicero propose to us of Glory; 'tis infinitely wide of my Account; for Ambi-

* Hor. Ep. 44. lib. 1.

† Persius, Sat. 5.

and Em-

and Ex-

h it.

iam-

who

and truct

tual.

me,

Tary,

Age

were etite

ther

both

Life,

from

tion,

tion, is, of all other, the most contrary Humour to Solitude; and Glory and Repose are so inconsistent, that they cannot possibly inhabit in one and the same Place; and for so much as I understand, those have only their Arms and Legs disingaged from the Crowd, their Mind and Intention remain engaged behind more than ever.

Tun', vetule, auriculis alienis colligis escas * ?.

Dost thou, old Dotard, at these Years, Gather fine Tales for others Ears?

They are only retired to take a better Leap, and by a stronger Motion, to give a brifker Charge into the Crowd. Will you fee how they shoot short? Let us put into the Counterpoise, the Advice of two Philosophers of two very different Sects, writing the one to Idomeneus, the other to Lucilius, their Friends, to retire into Solitude from worldly Honours, and the Administration of publick Affairs. You have, fay they, hitherto lived Swimming and Floating, come now and die in the Harbour: You have given the first Part of your Life to the Light, give what remains to the Shade. It is impossible to give over Butiness, if you do not also quit the Fruit, and therefore disengage yourselves from all the Concerns of Name and Glory. 'Tis to be feared, the Luftre of your former Actions will give you but too much Light, and follow you into your most private and obscure Retreat: Quit with other Pleasures, that which proceeds from the Approbation of another: And as to your Knowledge and Parts, never concern yourselves, they will not lose their Essect, if yourselves be ever the better for them. Remember him, who being afked, Why he took so much Pains in an Art, that could come to the Knowledge of but few Persons? A few are enough for me, reply'd he, I have enough of one, I have enough of never a one. He faid true, you and a Companion are Theatre enough to one another, or you to yourfelf. Let us be to you the whole People, and the whole People to you but one: 'Tis an unworthy Ambition, to think to derive Glory from a Man's Sloth and Privacy: You are to do like the Beafts of Chace, who put out the Track at the Entrance into their Den. You are to concent yourfelf no more how the World talks of you, but how you are to talk to yourfelf: Retire yourfelf into yourfelf, but first prepare yourself there to receive yourself: It were a Folly to trust yourfelf in your own Hands, if you cannot govern yourfelf; a Man may as well milcarry alone, as in Company, till you have rendred yourself as fuch, as before whom you dare not trip, and till you have a Bashfulness and Respect for yourself, Observantur species bonestæ animo *; Let just and bonest Things be still represented to the Mind. Present continually to your Imagination, Cato, Phocion, and Ariftides, in whose Presence the Fools themselves will hide their Faults: Make them Controulers of all your Intentions. Should your Intentions deviate from Virtue, your Respect to those Men will again fet you right; they will keep you in the Way of being contented with yourfelf to borrow nothing of any other but yourself; to restrain and fix your Soul in certain and limited Thoughts, wherein she may please herself, and having understood the true and real Goods, which Men the more enjoy, the more they understand, to rest satisfied, without Defire of Prolongation of Life or Memory. This is the Precept of the true and natural Philosophy, not of a boaffing and prating Philosophy, such as that of the two former.

* Perfius Sat. 1.

278 Montaigne's Essays.

* Cicero Tufc. Quaft. 1. 2.

CHAP.

279

A Consideration upon Cicero.

You ack cern how ourelf:

, if nif-

felf

you

ntur

TE-

mance em en-

of iny

elf,

len

Sis

a

179

CHAP. XXXIX.

A Consideration upon Cicero.

ONE Word more by Way of Comparison, betwixt these two. There are to be gathered out of the Writings of Cicero, and this younger Pliny, (who, in my Opinion, but little refembles his Uncle in his Humour,) infinite Testimonies of a Nature boundlessly ambitious; and amongst others, this for one, that they both, in the Sight of all the World, solicit the Historians of their Time, not to forget them in their Memoirs; and Fortune, as it were in spite, has made the Vanity of those Requests live upon Record down to this Age of ours, when she has long fince damned the Histories themselves to Oblivion. But this exceeds all Meanness of Spirit in Persons of such Quality, as they were, to think to derive any great and living Renown from babling and prating; even to the publishing of their private Letters to their Friends, and so withal, that though some of them were never fent, the Opportunity being lost, they nevertheless expose them to the Light with this worthy Excuse, that they were hereatter unwilling to lose their Labours, and have their Lucubrations thrown away. Was it not very well becoming two Confuls of Rome, Sovereign Magistrates of the Republick that commanded the World, to spend their Time in contriving queint and elegant Missives, thence to gain the Reputation of being Criticks in their own Mother-Tongue. What could a pitiful School-master have done worse, whose Trade it was to get his Living? If the Acts of Xenophon, and Cæjar, had not far enough transcended their Eloquence, I scarce believe they would ever have taken the Pains to have writ them. They made it their Business to recommend, not their Speaking, but their Doing. And could the Perfection of Eloquence have added any Lustre proportionable to the Merit of a great Perion, certainly Scipio and Lælius had never refigned the Honour of their Comedies, with all the Luxuriances and Dellcacies of the Latin Tongue, to an African Slave; for that that Work was theirs, the Beauty and Excellency of it do fufficiently declare; besides, Terence himself confesses much, and I should take it ill from any one that would dispossess me of that Belief. 'Tis a kind of injurious Mockery and Offence to extol a Man for Qualities milbecoming his Merit and Condition, though otherwise commendable in themselves, but such as ought not however to be his chiefeft Talent: As if a Man should commend a King for being a good Painter, a good Architect, a good Marksman, or a good Runner at the Ring; Commendations that add no Honour unless mentioned altogether, and in the Train of those that are more properly applicable to him, namely, his Justice, and the Science of Governing and Conducting his People both in Peace and War. At this Rate Agriculture was an Honour to Cyrus, and Eloquence and the Knowledge of good Letters to Charlemaigne. I have, in my Time, known some, who, by that Knack of Writing, having got both their Titles and Fortune, disown their Apprenticeship, purposely corrupt their Stile, and affect Ignorance in fo vulgar a Quality (which also our Nation observes, to be rarely seen in very intelligent Hands) to ieek a Reputation by better Qualities. The Companions to Demosthenes in the Embassy to Philip, extolling that Prince for handsom, eloquent, and a stout Drinker; De mosthenes reply'd, That those were Commendations more proper for a Woman, an Advocate, or a Spunge, than for a King.

nou

> Imperet bellante prior jacentem Lenis in bostem*.

First let his Empire from his Valour slow, And then by Mercy on a profirate Foe.

Tis not his Profession to know either how to hunt, or to dance well.

* Horat. Carm.

Orabunt

Orabunt Causas alii, cælique meatus Describent radio, & sulgentia sydera dicent, Hic regere imperio populos sciat *.

Deli

r that it do Tes as

d dif-

lock-ming dable

hiefeing

n, or

d no

in of nely,

Cling

ricul-

the

, in

ing,

ffect

tion

s) to 1003 that

De-nore

for

to

Let others plead at the litigious Bar, Describe the Spheres, point out each twinkling Star, Let this Man rule a greater Art by far.

Plutarch fays, moreover, that to appear so excellent in these less necessary Qualities, is to produce Witness against a Man's felf, that he has fpent his Time, and apply'd his Study ill, which ought to have been employ'd in the Acquilition of more necessary, and more useful Things; fo that Philip King of Macedon, having heard the Great Alexander his Son, fing once at a Feast to the Wonder and Envy of the best Musicians there: Art not thou ashamed, said he to him, to fing fo well? And to the same Philip, a Musician, with whom he was disputing about some Things concerning his Art: Heaven forbid! Sir, faid he, that so great a Misfortune should ever befal you, as to understand these Things better than I. A King should be able to answer, as Iphicrates did the Orator, who pressed upon him in his Invective after this Manner: And what art thou, that thou bravest it at this Rate? Art thou a Man at Arms? Art thou an Archer? Art thou a Pike? I am none of all this; but know how to command all these. And Antisthenes took it for an Argument of little Valour in Ismenas, that he was commended for playing excellently well upon a Flute. I know very well, that when I hear any one infift upon the Language of Esfays, I had rather a great deal he would fay nothing. 'Tis not fo much to elevate the Stile, as to depress the Sense, and so much the more offensively, as they do it difgracefully, and out of the Way. I am much deceived, if many other Essayists deliver more worth nothing as to the Matter, and how well or ill foever, if any other Writer has strewed them either much more material, or thicker upon his Paper than myself. To bring the more in, I only muster up the Heads; should I

* Virg. Æn. l. 6,

annex

VOL. I.

282

annex the Sequel, I should strangely multiply these Volumes: And how many Stories have I scattered up and down in this Book, that I only touch upon, which should any one more curiously search into, they would find Matter enough to produce infinite Essays: Neither those Stories, nor my Allegations, do always serve simply for Example, Authority or Ornament; I do not only regard them for the Use I make of them; they carry sometimes, besides what I apply them to, the Seed of a richer and a bolder Matter, and sometimes collaterally a more delicate Sound both to me myself, who will express no more in this Place, and to others who shall happen to be of my Ear.

But returning to the speaking Virtue; I find no great Choice betwixt, not knowing to speak any thing but very ill, and not knowing to speak any thing but very well. Non est Ornamentum virile Concinnitas * : Neatness of Still, is no manly Ornament. The Sages tell us, that as to what concerns Knowledge, there is nothing but Philosophy; and to what concerns Effects, nothing but Virtue, that's generally proper to all Degrees, and to all Orders. There is fomething like this in these two other Philosophers, for they also promise Eternity to the Letters they write w their Friends; but 'tis after another Manner, and by at commodating themselves for a good End, to the Vanity another; for they write to them, that if the Concernd making themselves known to future Ages, and the Third of Glory, do yet detain them in the Management of pub lick Affairs, and make them fear the Solitude and Reine ment to which they would perfuade them; let them nere trouble themselves more about it, forasmuch as they find have Credit enough with Posterity to affure them, the were there nothing else but the very Letters thus writing them, those Letters will render their Names as known and fa mous as their own publick Actions them felves could do. And befides this Difference, thefe are not idle and empty Letter, that contain nothing but a fine Gingle of well-chofen Words and fine couch'd Phrases, but rather replete and abounding with grave and learned Difcourfes, by which a Man may render

* Sen. Ep. 6.

e Vo-

p and hould

Mat-

tories,

imple,

m for efides

bolder

Sound

Place,

great it very well as to ophy;

There

rs, for

by ac-

nity of cern of

Third

of pub-

Retire

n never

ey full n, that writ to andfa.

o. And

Letters,

Words,

unding

an may tenes

Slaven

render himself not more eloquent, but more wise; and that instruct us not to speak, but to do well: Away with that Eloquence that so inchants us with it's Harmony, that we should more study it than Things. Unless you will allow that of Cicero, to be of so supreme a Perfection, as to form a complete Body of itself: And of him I shall farther add one story we read of him to this Purpose, wherein his Nature will much more manifestly be laid open to us: He was to make an Oration in Publick, and found himself a little straitned in Time, to sit his Words to his Mouth, as he had a mind todo; when Eros, one of his Slaves, brought him Word, that the Audience was deferr'd till the next Day, at which he was so ravish'd with Joy, that he enfranchis'd him for the good News.

Upon this Subject of Letters, I will add this more to what has been already faid, that it is a kind of Writing; wherein my Friends think I can do something; and I am willing to confess, I should rather have chole to publish my Whimfies that Way, than any other, had I had to whom to write; but I wanted fuch a fettled Correspondency as I once had to attract me to it, to raife my Fancy, and maintain the rest against me. For to traffick with the Wind, as some others have done, and to forge vain Names wdirect my Letters to, in a serious Subject, I could never doit but in a Dream, being a sworn Enemy to all Manner of Falfification: I should have been more diligent, and more confidently fecure, had I had a judicious and adulgent Friend, to whom to address, than thus to expose myself to various Judgments of a whole People; and Iam deceived, if I had not succeeded better: I have naturally a comick and familiar Stile; but it is a peculiar one, and not proper for publick Business, but like the language I speak, too compact, irregular, abrupt, and ingular; and as to Letters of Ceremony, that have no other Substance, than a fine Contexture of courteous and obliging Words, I am wholly to feek, I have neither Faculty nor Relish for those tedious Offers of Service and Affection; I am not good-natur'd to that Defree, and should not forgive myself, should I offer more han I intend, which is very remote from the present radice; for there never was so abject and servile a Profiwin of Tenders of Life, Soul, Devotion, Adoration, Vasfal, of fer Of the tha

Pre

a l Fe

fo

ma

wh

Fa

of

of

by fee

to

Slave, and I cannot tell what, as now; all which Expressions are so commonly, and so indifferently posted to and so by every one, and to every one, that when they would profess a greater and more respective Inclination upon more just Occasions, they have not wherewithal to expel it: I hate all Air of Flattery to Death, which is the Cause that I naturally fall into a shy, rough, and crude Way of Speaking, that to fuch as do not know me, may feem a little to relish of Disdain: I honour those mol to whom I shew the least Honour and Respect; and when my Soul moves with the greatest Chearfulness, I early forget the Ceremonies of Look and Gesture; I offer mylel faintly and bluntly, to them whose I effectually am, and tender myfelf the least to him, to whom I am the mot devoted: Methinks they should read it in my Hear, and that my Expression would but injure the Love I have conceived within. To welcome, take Leave, give Thanks, accost, offer my Service, and fuch verbal Formalities as the Laws of our modern Civility enjoin, I know no Man fo stupidly unprovided of Language as myself: And have never been employ'd in writing Letters of Favour and Recommendation, that he, in whose Behalf it was did not think my Mediation cold and imperfect. The Italians are great Printers of Letters. I do believe I have at least an hundred several Volumes of them; of all which those of Hannibal Caro seem to me to be the best: 112 the Paper I have scribbled to the Ladies, all the Timewha my Hand was really prompted by my Passion, were to in Being, there might peradventure be found a Page with thy to be communicated to our young Enamorato's, the are befotted with that Fury. I always write my Letter Post, and so precipitously, that though I write an innot rable ill Hand, I rather chuse to do it myself than to the ploy another; for I can find none able to follow me, and never transcribe any; but have accustomed the great One that know me to endure my Blots and Dashes, and upon Paper without Fold or Margent. Those that cost metal most Pains, are the worst of mine; when I once begin draw it in by Head and Shoulders, 'tis a Sign I am II there. I fall to without Premeditation or Defign, the Word begets the fecond, and fo to the End of the Chapter

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 285

flions

d fro

upon

rpres

s the crude may mol

where

eafily

nyself

and mot

Heart,

have nanks,

jes as

W BO

avour

If all ewhen

e 107

e wir

Letter

intokto en-ie, and

d upon me the am m

the firl

hapter. The The Letters of this Age confift more in fine Foldings and Prefaces, than Matter; where I had rather write two Letters, than close and fold up one, and always assign that Employment to some other; as also when the Business of my Letter is dispatch'd, I would with all my Heart transfer it to another Hand, to add those long Harangues, Offers, and Prayers that we place at the Bottom, and should be glad that some new Custom would discharge us of that unnecessary Trouble; as also superscribing them with along Ribble-row of Qualities and Titles, which, for Fear of Mistakes, I have several Times given over Writing, and especially to Men of the long Robe. There are so many Innovations of Offices, that 'tis hard to place so many Titles of Honour in their proper and due Order, which also being so dearly bought, they are neither to be mistaken nor omitted without Offence. I find the same Fault likewife with charging the Fronts and Title-Pages of the Books we commit to the Press, with such a Clutter of Titles.

CHAP. XL.

That the Relish of Goods and Evils, does, in a great Measure, depend upon the Opinion we have of them.

MEN (says an ancient Greek Sentence) are tormented with the Opinions they have of Things, and not by the Things themselves. It would be a great Victory obtained for the Relief of our miserable human Condition, could this Proposition be established for certain and true throughout. For if Evils have no Admission into us, but by the Judgment we ourselves make of them, it should seem that it is then in our own Power to despise them, or to turn them to good. If Things surrender themselves U 3

Montaigne's Esfays,

286

to our Mercy, why do we not convert and accommodal them to our Advantage? If what we call Evil and Torment, is neither Evil nor Torment in itself, but only that our Fancy gives it that Quality, and makes it so, it lyes in us to change and alter it; and it being in our own Choic, if there be no Constraint upon us, we must certainly be very strange Fools, to take Arms for that Side, which is most offensive to us, and to give Sickness, Want, and Contempt, a naufeous Tafte, if it be in our Power to give them a more grateful Relish; and if Fortune simply provides the Matter, 'tis our Bufiness to give it the form Now that which we call Evil, is not so of itself, or a least to that Degree that we make it; and that it depends upon us, to give it another Taste or Complexion, for all comes to one) let us examine how that can be maintain If the original Being of those Things we fear had Power to lodge themselves in us, by their own Authority, would then lodge itfelf alike, and in like Manner in al. for Men are all of the fame Kind, and faving in greater and less Proportions, are all provided with the same Utento and Instruments to conceive and to judge; but the Direfity of Opinions we have of those Things, does cleanly evidence, that they only enter us by Composition: Use particular Person, peradventure, admits them in their the Being; but a Thousand others give them a new and contrary Being in them. We hold Death, Poverty, and Grief, for our principal Enemies, but this Death which tome repute the most dreadful of all dreadful Things who does not know that others call it the only fecure the bour from the Storms and Tempests of Life? The low reign Good of Nature? The fole Support of Libery! And the common and Sudden Remedy of all Evils? And as the one expect it with Fear and Trembling, the other support it with greater Ease than Life. That Blade complains of it's Facility, > Mors utinam pavidos vitæ subducere nolles, Sed Virtus te sola daret *!

> > * Luc. 1. 3.

O Death

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 287

O Death! I wish thou wouldst the Coward spare, That but the Daring none might thee confer.

odate

Tor-

that ves in

Holce,

ly be ich is

Con-

give pro-

form.

penes

for all

Power

ity, it

n all;

er and

tenhis

Diver-clearly

Une

ir tru

d con-

, and

Which

hings

e Har

e fore

berty!

? And

other

e com-

But let us leave these glorious Courages. Theodorus answered Lysimachus, who threatned to kill him, Thou wilt do a brave Thing, faid he, to arrive at the Force of a Cantharides. The greatest Part of Philosophers are observed to have either purposely prevented, or hastened and assisted their own Death. How many ordinary People do we lee led to Execution, and that not to a simple Death, but mixt with Shame, and sometimes with grievous Torments, appear with fuch Affurance, what through Obstinacy, or natural Simplicity, that a Man can discover no Change from their ordinary Condition; fettling their domestick Affairs, recommending them to their Friends, finging, preaching, and diverting the People fo much, as fometimes to fally out into Jests, and to drink to their Companions, as well as Socrates. One that they were leading to the Gallows, told them they must not carry him through such a Street, left a Merchant that lived there should arrest him by the Way for an old Debt. Another told the Hangman, he must not touch his Neck, for fear of making him laugh, he was so ticklish. Another answered his Confessor, who promised him, that he should that Day sup with our Lord. Do you go then, said he, in my room; for I for my Part keep Fast to Day. Another having called for Drink, and the Hangman having drank first, said he would not drink after him, for Fear of catching the Pox. Every Body has heard the Tale of the Piccard, to whom, being upon the Ladder, they presented a Whore, telling him, (as our Law does fometimes permit) that if he would marry her, they would fave his Life; he having a while confidered her, and perceiving that she halted, Come, tie up, tie up, faid he, she limps. And they tell another Story of the same Kind, of a Fellow in Denmark, who being condemned to lose his Head, and the like Condition being proposed to him upon the Scaffold, refused it, by Reason the Maid they offered him, had hollow Cheeks, and too sharp a Nose. A Servant at Tholouse being accused of Herely, for the Sum of his Belief referred himself to that of his Master, a young Student Prisoner with him, chusing rather to die, U4

Montaigne's Estays.

than suffer himself to be persuaded, that his Master could err. We read, that of the Inhabitants of Arras, when Lewis the Eleventh took that City, a great many let them. felves be hang'd, rather than they would fay, God fave the King. And amongst that mean-soul'd Race of Men, the Buffoons, there have been fome, who would not leave their Fooling at the very Moment of Death. He that the Hangman turned off the Ladder, cried, Launch the Galley, an ordinary foolish Saying of his; and the other, whom at the Point of Death, his Friends having laid upon a Pallet before the Fire, the Physician asking him where his Pain lay, betwixt the Bench and the Fire, faid he; and the Priest, to give him the extreme Unction, groping for his Feet, which his Pain had made him pull up to him, you will find them, faid he, at the End of my Legs. To one that being present exhorted him to recommend himself to God, why, who goes thither, said he? And the other replying, it will prefently be yourfelf, if it be his good Pleasure; would I were sure to be there by Tomorrow Night, said he; do but recommend yourself to him, faid the other, and you will foon be there: I were best then, said he, to carry my Recommendations myself. In the Kingdom of Narsingua to this Day, the Wives of their Priests are buried alive with the Bodies of their Hulbands, all other Wives are burnt at their Husbands Funerals, which also they not only constantly, but chearfully undergo. At the Death of their King, his Wives and Concubines, his Favourites, all his Officers and domestick Servants, which make up a great Number of People, prefent themselves fo chearfully to the Fire where his Body is burnt, that they feem to take it for a fingular Honour to accompany their Master in Death. During our late War of Milan, where there happened fo many Takings and Retakings of Towns, the People impatient of so many various Changes of Fortune, took fuch a Resolution to die, that I have heard my Father fay, he there faw a Lift taken of five and twenty Masters of Families, that made themselves away in one Week's Time: An Accident somewhat refembling that of the Zanthians, who being befieged by Brutus, precipitated themselves. Men, Women, and Children, into fuch a furious Appetite of dying, that

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. ıld nothing can be done to evade Death, which they did not put in Practice to avoid Life; infomuch, that Brutus with all his en Endeavours could fave but a very small Number. Every the Opinion is of Force enough, to make itself to be espoused at he the Expence of Life. The first Article of that valiant Oath that Greece took and observ'd in the Median War, was, that ve every one should sooner exchange Life for Death, than their alown Laws for those of Persia. What aWorld of People do er, we see in the Wars betwixt the Turks and the Greeks, rather on embrace a cruel Death, than to uncircumcife themselves to ere admit of Baptism. An Example of which no Sort of Religion is incapable. The Kings of Castile having banish'd e ; the Jews out of their Dominions, John, King of Portugal, ng in Consideration of eight Crowns a Head, fold them a Re-38. tirement into his, for a certain limited Time; upon Condind tion that the Time prefix'd coming to expire, they should be nd gone; and he to furnish them with Shipping, to transport be them into Africk. The limited Day came, which once laps'd 0. they were given to understand, that such as were afterwards to found in the Kingdom should remain Slaves: Vessels were ere very flenderly provided, and those who embark'd in them, lf. were rudely and villainously us'd by the Seamen, who beof sides other Indignities, kept them cruising upon the Sea, afone while forwards, and another backwards 'till they had ls, spent all their Provisions, and were constrain'd to buy of ınthem at fo dear Rates, and fo long withal, that they fet them not on Shore, 'till they were all stript to their very ck Shirts. The News of this inhuman Usage being brought to those who remain'd behind, the greater Part of them 15 refolv'd upon Slavery, and fome made a Shew of changing their Religion. Emanuel, the Successor of John, being come to ite to the Crown, first set them at Liberty; and afterwards algs tering his Mind, order'd them to depart his Country, affigning three Ports for their Passage. Hoping (says the Biny shop of Osorius, no contemptible Latin Historian of these ift latter Times) that the Favour of the Liberty he had given de them, having fail'd of converting them to Christianity; eyet the Difficulty of committing themselves to the Mercy of the Mariners, and of abandoning a Country they were now habituated to, and were grown very rich in, to go and expose themselves in strange and unknown Regions, would

290 Montaigne's Essays.

would certainly do it: But finding himself deceiv'd in his Expectation, and that they were all refolv'd upon the Voyage, he cut off two of the Ports he had promifed them, to the End, that the Length and Incommodity of the Passage might reduce some; or that he might have Opportunity, by crowding them all into one Place, the more conveniently to execute what he had defigned; which was to force all the Children under fourteen Years of Age, from the Arms of their Fathers and Mothers, to transport them from their Sight and Conversation, into a Place where they might be instructed, and brought up in our Religion. He says that this produc'd a most horrid spectacle; the natural Affection, betwixt the Parents and their Children, and moreover their Zeal to their ancient Belief, contending against this violent Decree. Fathers and Mothers were commonly feen making themselves away, and by a yet much more rigorous Example, precipitating out of Love and Compassion, their young Children into Wells and Pits, to avoid the Severity of this Law. As to the Remainder of them, the Time that had been prefix'd being expir'd, for want of Means to transport them, they again return'd into Slavery. Some also turned Chnttians, upon whose Faith, as also that of their Posterity even to this Day, which is a hundred Years fince, few Portuguese can yet rely or believe them to be real Converts; though Custom, and Length of Time, are much more powerful Counsellors in such Changes, than all other Constraints whatever. In the Town of Castlenau-Darry, htty Hereticks, Albegenfis, at one Time fuffer'd themselves to be burnt alive in one Fire, rather than they would renounce their Opinions. Quoties non modo ductores noffri, dicit Cicero, sed universi etiam exercitus, ad non dubiam mortem concurrerunt? How oft, have not only our Leaders, but whole Armies, run to a certain and apparent Death? I have feen an intimate Friend of mine, with a real Affection, that was rooted in his Heart by divers plaufible Arguments, which he would never permit me to dispossels him of, run headlong upon Death upon the first honourable Occasion that offer'd itself to him, to precipitate him. felf into it; and that too, without any Manner of ville ble Reason, with an obstinate and ardent Defire of dying. MARIE

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 291

We have feveral Examples of our own Times of those, even among little Children, who for Fear of a Whipping, or fome fuch little Thing, have difpatch'd themselves And, what shall we not fear, (says one of the Ancients to that Purpose) if we dread that which Cowardice itself has chosen for it's Refuge? Should I here produce a tedious Catalogue of those of all Sexes and Conditions, and of all Sorts, even in the most happy Ages, who have either with great Constancy look'd Death in the Face, or voluntarily fought it; and fought it not only to avoid the Evils of this Life, but some purely to avoid the Satiety of living; and others, for the Hope of a better Condition elsewhere, I should never have done. Nay, the Number is so infinite, that in Truth, I should have a better Bargain on't, to reckon up those who have fear'd it. This one therefore shall serve for all; Pyrrbo, the Philosopher, being one Day in a Boat, in a very great Tempest, shew'd to those he saw the most affrighted about him, and encourag'd them by the Example of a Hog, that was there, nothing at all concern'd at the Storm. Shall we then dare to fay, that this Advantage of Reason, of which we so much boatt, and upon the Account of which we think ourielves Masters and Emperors over the rest of the Creatures, was given us for a Torment? To what End ferves the Knowledge of Things, if it renders us more unmanly? If we lose the Tranquillity and Repose we should enjoy without it? And if it puts us into a worse Condition than Pyrrho's Hog? Shall we employ the Understanding that was conferr'd upon us for our greatest Good, to our own Ruin? Setting ourselves against the Defign of Nature, and the universal Order of Things, which intend that every one should make Use of the Faculties, Members and Means he has, to his own best Advantage? But it may peradventure be objected against me your Rule is true enough as to what concerns Death: But what will you fay of Necessity? What will you moreover lay of Pain, that Aristippus, Hieronymus, and almost all the wife Men have reputed the worst of Evils? And those who have deny'd it by Word of Mouth, did however confess it in Effects. Possidonius being extremely tormented with a tharp and painful Disease, Pompeius came to visit him, excuting himfelf, that he had taken so unseasonable a Time to ed

e le

h rt

e

MONTAIGNE'S Essays.

292

come to hear him discourse of Philosophy; God forbid, faid Possidonius to him again, that Pain should ever have the Power to hinder me from talking, and thereupon fell immediately upon a Discourse of the Contempt of Pain: But in the mean Time, his own Infirmity was playing it's Part, and plagu'd him to the Purpose; to which he cry'd out, thou may'st work thy Will, Pain, and torment me with all the Power thou hast, but thou shalt never make me say, that thou art an Evil. This Story that they make such a Clutter withal, what is there in it, I fain would know, to the Contempt of Pain? It only fights it with Words, and in the mean Time, if the Shootings and Dolours he felt, did not move him, why did he interrupt his Discourse? Why did he fancy he did fo great a Thing, in forbearing to confess it an Evil? All does not here consist in the Imagination, our Fancies may work upon other Things: But this here is a certain Science that is playing it's Part, of which our Senses themselves are Judge.

Qui nisi sunt veri, ratio quoque falsa sit omnis *.

Which if it be not here most true; Reason itself must be false too.

Shall we persuade our Skins, that the Jerks of a Whip tickle us? Or our Taste, that a Potion of Aloes is Graves Wine. Pyrrho's Hog is here in the same Predicament with us; he is not afraid of Death, 'tis true, but if you beat him, he will cry out to some Purpose: Shall we force the general Law of Nature, which in every living Creature under Heaven is seen to tremble under Pain? The very Trees seem to groan under the Blows they receive. Death is only felt by Discourse, forasmuch as it is the Motion of an Instant.

Aut fuit, aut veniet, nihil est præsentis in illa, Morsque minus pænæ, quam mora mortis habet ||-

* Luc. 4.

| Ovid. Epift. Ariad.

Death's

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 293

Death's always past, or coming on, in this There never any thing of Present is: And the Delays of Death more painful are, Than Death itself, and Dying is by far.

A Thousand Beasts, a Thousand Men, are sooner dead than threatned. That also which we principally pretend to fear in Death is Pain, the ordinary Forerunner of it: Yet, it we may believe a holy Father, Malam mortem non facit, nist quod sequitur mortem. Nothing makes Death Evil, but what follows it. And I should yet say more probably, that neither that which goes before, nor that which follows after, are at all the Appendants of Death: We excuse ourfelves fafely. And I find by Experience, that it is rather our Impatience at the Imagination of Death, that makes us impatient of Pain; and that we find it doubly grievous, as it threatens us with Death. But Reason accusing our Cowardice, for fearing a Thing so sudden, so unavoidable, and to intenfible, we take the other as the more excufable Pretence. All Ills that carry no other Danger along with them, but fimply the Evils themselves, we despise as Things of no Danger. The Tooth-Ach, or the Gout, as painful as they are, being yet not reputed mortal, who reckons them in the Catalogue of Diseases? But let us presuppose, that in Death we principally regard the Pain, as also, there is nothing to be fear'd in Poverty, but the Miseries it brings along with it, of Thirst, Hunger, Cold, Heat, Watching, and the other Inconveniences it makes us fuffer, yet still we have nothing to do with any Thing but Pain. I will grant, and very willingly, that it is the worst Accident of our Being, (for I am the Man upon Earth that the most hates and avoids it, considering, that hitherto I thank God I have had so little Commerce with it) but still it lyes in us, if not to annihilate, at least to lessen it by Patience, and though the Body should mutiny, to maintain the Soul nevertheless in a good Temper. And were it not 10, who would ever have given Reputation to Virtue, Valour, Force, Magnanimity, and Resolution? Where were their Parts to be plaid, if there were no Pain to be defied? Avida est periculi virtus*. Virtue is greedy of Danger.

* Seneca.

Were

294 Montaigne's Esfays.

Were there no lying upon the hard Ground, no enduring, armed at all Points, the Southern and Mid-day Heats, no feeding upon the Flesh of Horses and Asses, no seeing ourselves hack'd and hew'd to Pieces, no suffering a Bullet to be pulled out from amongst the shattered Bones, the flitching up, cauterifing, and fearthing of Wounds, by what Means were the Advantage we covet to have over the Vulgar to be acquired? 'Tis far from flying Evil and Pain, what the Sages fay, that of Actions equally good, a Man should most covet to perform that wherein there is greatest Labour and Pain. Non est enim bilaritate, nec lascivia, nec risu, aut joco comite levitatis, sed sæpe etiam trisles sirmitate, & constantia funt beati*: For Men are not only happy by Mirth and Wantonness, neither by Laughter and Jesting, the Companion of Levity, but very often the graver and more melancholick Sort of Men reap Felicity from their Steadiness and Constancy. And for this Reason it ever was impossible to persuade our Fore-fathers, but that the Victories obtained by Dint of Force, and the Hazard of War, were still more honourable than those gained with great Security, by Stratagem or Practice.

Lætius est, quoties magno sibi constat bonestum +.

A handsom Act more handsom does appear, By how much more it cost the Doer dear.

Besides, this ought to be our Comfort, that naturally, if the Pain be violent, 'tis but short; and if long, nothing violent: Si gravis, brevis: Si longus, levis. Thou wilt not feel it long, if thou feelest it too much, it will either put an End to itself, or to thee; if thou can'st not support it, it will export thee. Memineris maximos morte siniri; parvos multa habere intervalla requietis: Mediocrium nos este dominos: Ut si tolerabiles sint, feramus; sin minus, è vita, quam ea non placeat tanquam è theatro exeamus : Remember, that great Ones are terminated by Death, that small

bare

^{*} Cicero de fin. l. 2. + Luc. lib. 9. ‡ Cicero.

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 295 have long Intermissions of Repose, and that we are Masters of the moderate Sort: So that, if tolerable, we may bear them, if not, we can go out of Life as from a Theaflers of the moderate Sort: So that, if tolerable, we may bear them, if not, we can go out of Life as from a Theatre, where the Entertainment does not please us; that which makes us fuffer Pain with fo much Impatience, is the not being accustomed to repose our chiefest Contentment in the Soul, that we do not enough rely upon her who is the fole and fovereign Mistress of our Condition. The Body, faving in greater or less Proportion, has but one and the same Bent and Biass; whereas the Soul is variable into all Sorts of Forms, and subjects to herself, and to her own Empire, all Things whatfoever; both the Senses of the Body, and all other Accidents: And therefore it is, that we ought to study her, to enquire into her, and to rouze up all her powerful Faculties. There is neither Reason, Form, nor Prescription, that can any thing prevail against her Inclination and Choice; of fo many Thousands of Biaffes that fhe has at her Disposal, let us give her one proper to our Repose and Conversation, and then we shall not only be sheltered and secured from all Manner of Injury and Offence, but moreover gratified and obliged, if we will, with Evils and Offences. She makes her Profit indifferently of all Things. Error and Dreams serve her to good Use, as a loyal Matter to lodge us in Safety and Contentment. 'Tis plain enough to be feen, that 'tis the Sharpness of our Conceit that gives the Edge to our Pains and Pleasures. Beasts that have no fuch Thing, leave to their Bodies their own free and natural Sentiments, and consequently, in every Kind, very near the fame, as appears by the refembling Application of their Motions. If we would not disturb, in our Members, the Jurisdiction that appertains to them in this, 'tis to be believed, it would be the better for us, and that Nature has given them a just and moderate Temper. both to Pleasure and Pain; neither can it fail of being just. being equal, and common. But feeing we have enfranchis'd ourselves from these Rules, to give ourselves up to the rambling Liberty of our own Fancies, let us at least help to incline them to the most agreeable Side. Plato fears our too vehemently engaging ourselves with Grief and Pleasure, foralmuch as these two much knit and ally the Soul to the Body: Whereas I rather quite contrary, by Reason it, too much much separates and disunites them. As an Enemy is made more fierce by our Flight, fo Pain grows proud to fee us truckle under it. She will furrender upon much better Terms to them who make Head against her: A Man must oppose, and stoutly set himself against it. In retiring and giving Ground, we invite and pull upon ourselves the Ruin that threatens us. As the Body is more firm in an Encounter, the more stiffly and obstinately it applies itself to it; fo it is with the Soul. But let us come to Examples, which are the proper Commodity for Fellows of such feeble Reins as myfelf; where we shall find, that it is with Pain as with Stones that receive a more spritely, or a more Janguishing Lustre, according to the Foil they are set upon, that it has no more Room in us than we are pleased to al-Iow it. Tantum doluerunt, quantum doloribus se inseruerunt*: They grieved so much the more, by how much they set themselves to grieve. We are more sensible of one little Touch of a Chirurgeon's Lancet, than of twenty Wounds with a Sword in the Heat of Fight. The Pains of Childbearing, faid by the Physician, and even by God himlelt, to be very great, and which our Women keep fo great a Clutter about, there are whole Nations that make nothing of them. To fay nothing of the Lacedamonian Women, what Alteration can you see in our Switzers Wives of the Guard, faving, as they trot after their Husbands, you lee them To-day with the Child hanging at their Backs, that they carried Yesterday in their Bellies? And the counterfest Gypfies we have amongst us, go themselves to wash their's as foon as they come into the World, in the first River they meet. Besides so many Whores as daily steal their Children out of their Womb, as before they stole them in; that fair and noble Wife of Sabinus, a Patrician of Rome, for another's Interest alone, without Help, without crying out, or so much as a Groan, endured the Bearing of Twins. A poor simple Boy of Lacedamon, having stole a Fox, (for they more fear the Shame of their Knavery in Stealing, than we do the Punishment of our Knavery) and having got him under his Coat, did rather endure the Tearing out of his

* Aug. de Civit. Dei.

dh

0

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 297

his Bowels than he would discover his Theft. And another curing at a Sacrifice, fuffered himfelf to be burnt to the Bone, by a Coal that fell into his Sleeve, rather than disturb the Ceremony. There have been a great Number, for a sole Trial of Virtue, who, following their Instructions, have at feven Years old endured to be whipt to Death, without changing their Countenance: And Cicero has feen them fight in Parties, with Fifts, Feet and Teeth, 'till they have fainted and funk down, rather than confess themselves overcome. Custom would never conquer Nature, for he is ever invincible, but we have infected the Mind with Shadows, Delights, Wantonness, Negligence and Sloth; and with vain Opinions, and corrupt Manners, render'd it effeminate and mean. Every one knows the Story of Scawho, who having flipt into the Enemies Camp to kill their General, and missing his Blow, to repair his Fault, by a more strange Invention, and to deliver his Country, he boldly confessed to Porsenna, (who was the King he had an Intent to kill) not only his Design, but moreover added, That there were then in his Camp a great Number of Romans, his Accomplices in the Enterprize, as good Men as he, and to shew what a one he himself was, having caused a Pan of burning Coals to be brought, he faw and endured his Arm to broil and roast, 'till the King himself conceiving Horror at the Sight, commanded the Pan to be taken away. What would you fay of him, that would not vouchfafe to respite his reading in a Book, whilst he was under Incision? And of the other that perfished to mock and laugh, in Contempt of the Pains inflicted upon him; so that the provok'd Cruelty of the Executioners that had him in handling, and all the Inventions of Tortures redoubled upon him one after another, spent in vain, gave him the Bucklers? But he was a Philosopher. A Fencer of Cafar's endur'd, and laughing all the while, his Wounds to be searched, lanced and laid open. Quis mediocris glas diator ingemuit? Quis vultum mutavit unquam? Quis non modo stelit, verum etiam decubuit turpiter? Quis cum decubuilfet, ferrum recipere jussus, collum contraxit*? What

Vol. I. * Cicero Tufc. 1. 2.

mean

us

ult

he

an

elf

ch

th

re

let let

le

2 on no ne

n

mean Fencer ever so much as gave a Groan? Which of them ever so much as changed his Countenance? Which of them standing or falling did either with Shame? Which of them, when he was down, and commanded to receive the Blow of the Sword, ever shrunk in his Neck? Let us bring in the Women too. Who has not heard at Paris of her who caused her Face to be slea'd, only for the fresher Complexion of a new Skin? There are some who have drawn good and sound Teeth, to make their Voices more soft and sweet, or to place them in better Order. How many Examples of the Contempt of Pain have we in that Sex? What can they not do? What do they fear to do, for never so little Hopes of an Addition to their Beauty?

Vellere queis cura est albos à stirpe capillos, Et faciem dempta pelle referre novam*.

Who pluck'd their gray Hairs by the Roots, and try An old Head, Face, with young Skin to supply.

I have feen some of them swallow Sand, Ashes, and do their utmost to destroy their Stomachs, to get pale Complexions. To make a fine Spanish Boy, what Racks will they not endure of Tweaking and Bracing, 'till they have Notches in their Sides, cut into the very quick Flesh, and fometimes to Death? It is an ordinary Thing with several Nations at this Day, to hurt themselves in good Earnest, to gain Credit to what they profess, of which our King re lates notable Examples of what he has feen in Poland, and done towards himself. But besides this, which I know to have been imitated by some in France, when I came from that famous Assembly of the Estates at Blois, I had a little before feen a Maid in Picardy, who, to manifest the Ardou of her Promises, as also her Constancy, gave herself, with a Bodkin she wore in her Hair, four or five good lusty Stalls into the Arm, 'till the Blood gushed out to some Purpole The Turks make themselves great Scars in Honour of their Mistresses, and to the End they may the longer remain,

* Tib. lib. 1. Eleg. 9.

they

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 299 they presently clap Fire to the Wound, where they hold it b of b of the an incredible Time to stop the Blood, and form the Cicatrice; People that have been Eye-Witnesses of it, have both writ and sworn it to me. But for ten Aspers, there are t us there every Day Fellows to be found, that will give themselves a good deep Slash in the Arms or Thighs. I am is of ther willing, though, to have the Testimonies nearest to us, when we have most Need of them; for Christendom does furnish nave us with enough. And after the Example of our bleffed nore Guide, there have been many who would bear the Cross. How that We learn by Testimony, very worthy of Belief, that the King St. Lewis wore a Hair-Shirt, 'till in his old Age his do, ity? Confessor gave him a Dispensation to leave it off; and that every Friday he caused his Shoulders to be drubbed by his Priest with fix fmall Chains of Iron, which were always carried about amongst his Night Accoutrements for that Purpose. William, our late Duke of Guienne, the Father of this Eleanor, who has transmitted this Dutchy into the Houses of France and England, continually for ten or twelve Years before he died, wore a Suit of Armour under a religious d do Habit, by Way of Penance. Fulk, Count of Anjou, went as far as Jerusalem, to cause himself to be whipt Com. will there by two of his Servants, with a Rope about his Neck, have before the Sepulchre of our Lord: But do we not, moreand over, every Good-Friday, in several Places, see great Numbers vera of Men and Women, beat and whip themselves 'till they eft, to lacerate and cut the Flesh to the very Bones? I have often feen this, and without Enchantment, when it was faid, there g It. d, and were some amongst them, (for they go disguised) who for Money undertook by this Means to fave harmless the Reliow to from gion of others, by a Contempt of Pain, so much the little greater, as the Incentives of Devotion are more effectual, than those of Avarice. Q. Maximus buried his Son when rdour he was a Conful, and M. Cato his when Prætor elect; and with Stabs L. Paulus both his, within a few Days one after another, rpose. with fuch a Countenance as expressed no Manner of Grief. their I said once merrily of a certain Person, that he had disapmain, pointed the divine Justice: For the violent Death of three grown up Children of his, being one Day fent him, for a fevere Scourge, as it is to be supposed, he was so far from being afflicted at the Accident, that he rather took it for a they parti-

Montaigne's Essays.

300

particular Grace and Favour of Heaven. I do not follow these monstrous Humours, though I lost two or three at Nurse, if not without Grief, at least, without repining, and yet there is hardly any Accident that pierces nearer to the Quick. I fee a great many other Occasions of Sorrow, that should they happen to me, I should hardly feel; and have despised fome when they have befallen me, to which the World has given so terrible a Figure, that I should blush to boast of my Constancy. Ex quo intelligitur, non in Natura, sed in Opinione esse Ægritudinem*: By which it is understood, that the Grief is not in Nature, but Opinion. Opinion is a powerful Party, bold, and without Measure; who ever to greedily hunted after Security and Repose, as Alexander and Cafar did after Disturbances and Difficulties? Terez, the Father of Sitalces, was wont to fay, that when he had no Wars, he fancied there was no Difference betwixt him and his Groom. Cato the Conful, to secure some Cities of Spain from Revolt, only interdicting the Inhabitants from wearing Arms, a great many killed themselves: Ferox gent, nullam vita rati sine Armis esse: A fierce People, who thought there was no Life without Arms. How many do we know, who have forfaken the Calms and Sweets of a quiet Life, at home amongst their Acquaintance, to seek out the Honour of uninhabitable Deferts; and having precipitated themselves into fo abject a Condition, as to become the Scorn and Contempt of the World, have hugged them. felves with the Conceit, even to Affectation. Cardinal Barromeus, who died lately at Milan, in the Midst of all the Jollity that the Air of Italy, his Youth, Birth and great Riches invited him too, kept himfelf in fo austere a Way of Living, that the same Robe he wore in Summer, served him for Winter too; had only Straw for his Bed, and his Hours of Vacancy from the Affairs of his Employment, he continually spent in Study upon his Knees, having a little Bread and a Glass of Water fet by his Book, which was all the Provision of his Repast, and all the Time he spent in Eating. I know some who consentingly have acquired both Profit and Advancement from Cuckoldry, of which the

* Cicero.

bare

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 301 bare Name only affrights fo many People. If the Sight be not the most necessary of all our Senses, 'tis at least the most pleasant: But the most pleasant and the most useful of all our Members, feem to be those of Generation, and yet a great many have conceived a mortal Hatred against them, only for this, that they were too amiable; and have deprived themselves of them, only for their Value. As much ed thought he of his Eyes, that put them out. The Gene-125 rality and more folid Sort of Men look upon Abundance of of Children as a great Bleffing; I, and some others, think it in as great a Benefit to be without them. And when you afk bat Thales, why he does not marry, he tells you, because he has no Mind to leave any Posterity behind him. That our fo Opinion gives the Value to Things, is very manifest in a ınd great many of these which we do not so much regard to the prize them, but ourfelves; and never confider, either their 110 Virtues, or their Use; but only how dear they cost us: As ind though that were a Part of their Substance: And we only of repute for Value in them, not what they bring to us, but om what we add to them. By which I understand, that we ens, are great Managers of our Expence. As it weighs, it ferves uhi for so much as it weighs; our Opinion will never suffer it do to want of it's Value. The Price gives Value to the Diaof mond, Difficulty to Virtue, Suffering to Devotion, and eek Griping to Physick. A certain Person to be poor, threw ore. his Crowns into the fame Sea to which fo many came from me all Parts of the World to fish and rifle for Riches. Epicurus emlays, That to be rich, is no Advantage, but only an Alinal teration of Affairs. In plain Truth, it is not Want, but all rather Abundance that creates Avarice. Neither will I stick reat to deliver my own Experience concerning this Affair. Way I have fince my Childhood lived in three Sorts of Condirved tions; the first, which continued for twenty Years, I past his over without any other Means but what were accidental, and he depending upon the Allowance and Affiftance of others, ittle without Stint or certain Revenue. I then spent my Mois all ney fo much the more chearfully, and with fo much the nt in less Care how it went, as it wholly depended upon my oboth ver Confidence of Fortune; and never lived more at my the Eafe, I never had the Repulse of finding the Purse of any of my Friends shut against me, having enjoined myself this Necefbare

302 Montaigne's Essays.

Necessity above all other Necessities whatever, by no Means to fail of Payment at the appointed Time, which also they have a thousand Times respited, seeing how careful I wasto fatisfy them; fo that I practifed at once a thrifty, and withal, a Kind of alluring Honesty. I naturally feel a Kind of Pleasure in Paying, as if I eased my Shoulders of a troublefom Weight, and in freeing myself from that Image of Slavery; as also, that I had a ravishing Kind of Satisfaction, in pleafing another by doing a just Action. Those Kind of Payments excepted, where the Trouble of Reckoning and Dodging are required, and in fuch Cases, where I can meet with no Body to ease me of that hateful Torment, I avoid them, how fcandalously and injuriously soever, all I possibly can, for fear of those little wrangling Disputes, for which, both by Humour, and Way of Speaking, are to totally improper and unfit. There is nothing I hate fo much, as driving on a Bargain; 'tis a mere Traffick of Cozenage and Impudence; where, after an Hour's Cheapning and Dodging, both Parties abandon their Word and Oath for five Sols Profit or Abatement. And yet I always borrowed at great Disadvantage, for wanting the Confidence to fpeak to the Person myself, I committed my Request to the Persuasion of a Letter, which usually is no very successful Advocate, and is of very great Advantage to him who has a Mind to deny. I in those Days more jocundly and freely referred the Conduct of my Affairs to the Stars, than I have fince done to my own Providence and Judgment. Molt good Husbands look upon it as a horrible Thing to live always thus in Uncertainty, and are not angry in the first Place, that the greatest Part of the World live so. How many worthy Men have wholly flighted and abandoned the Certainty of their own Estates, and yet daily do it, to trust to the inconstant Favour of Princes and fickle Fortune! Cæsar ran above a Million of Gold, more than he was worth, in Debt, to become Cæsar. And how many Merchants have begun their Traffick by the Sale of their Farms, which they fent into the Indies?

Tot per impetentia freta *?

* Cat. Epig. 4.

In

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 303

In so great a Dearth of Devotion, as we see in these Days, we have a thousand and a thousand Colleges that pass it over commodiously enough, expecting every Day their Dinner from the Liberality of Heaven. Secondly, They do not take Notice, that this Certitude, upon which they so much rely, is not much less uncertain and hazardous than Hazard itself. I see Misery as near beyond two thousand Crowns a Year, as if it stood close by me; for besides, that it is in the Power of Chance to make a hundred Breaches to Poverty, through the greatest Strength of our Riches (there being very often no Mean betwixt the highest and the lowest Fortune.)

ns

ey

h-

of le-

of

ICofe

I

all

for fo

ng ng

05-

to he ful

nas

ely

SVE

oft alirft

OW

the uft

er-

eir

In

Fortuna vitrea est: Tum, quum splendet, frangitur *.

Fortune is Glafs, the brighter it doth shine More frail, and soonest broken when most fine.

And to turn all our Barricado's and Bulwarks Topfy-Turvy, I find that by divers Causes, Indigence is as frequently seen to inhabit with those who have Estates, as with those that have none; and, peradventure, it is then far less grievous when alone, than when accompany'd with Riches; which flow more from good Management than Income. Faber eft suæ quisque Fortunæ +: Every one is the Hammerer of his own Fortune; and an uneasy, necessitous, busy Man, seems to me more miserable, than he that is simply poor. In divitiis inopes, quod genus egestatis gravissimum est. Poor in the Midst of Riches, which is the most insupportable Kind of Poverty. The greatest and most wealthy Princes are by Poverty and Want driven to the most extreme Necessity: For can there be any more Extreme, than to become Tyrants and unjust Usurpers of their Subjects Goods and Estates ?

My fecond Condition of Life was, to have Money of my own; wherein I fo ordered the Matter, that I had foon laid up a very notable Sum out of fo mean a Fortune; confidering with myfelf, that that only was to be reputed

* Sen. Provid. + Sen. Ep. 4. having

Montaigne's Esfays.

304

having, which a Man referved from his ordinary Expence that a Man could not absolutely rely upon Revenue to receive, how clear foever his Estate might be. For what, faid I, if I should be surprized by such or such an Accident; and after such like vain and vicious Imaginations, would very learnedly, by this Hoarding of Money, provide against all Inconveniencies; and could moreover answer, fuch as objected to me, that the Number of them was too infinite, that I could not lay up for all, I could however do it at least for some, and for many. Yet was not this done without a great deal of Solicitude and Anxiety of Mind. I kept it very close, and though I dare talk to boldly of myfelf, never spoke of my Money, but fallely, as others do, who being rich, pretend to be poor, and being poor, pretend to be rich, dispensing with their Consciences from ever telling sincerely what they have. A ridiculous and shameful Prudence. Was I to go a Journey? methought I was never enough provided; and the more I loaded myfelf with Money, the more allo was I loaded with Fear, one while the Danger of the Roads, another of the Fidelity of him who had the Charge of my Baggage, of whom, as some others that I know, I was never sufficiently secure, if I had him not always in my Eye. If I chanced to leave the Key of my Cabinet behind me, what strange Jealousies and Anxiety of Mind did I enter into? And which was worfe, without daring to acquaint any Body with it. My Mind was eternally taken up with fuch Things as these, so that all Things confidered, there is more Trouble in keeping Money, than in getting it. And if I did not altogether fo much as I lay, or was not effectually fo fcandalously folicitous of my Money, as I have made myself; yet it cost me something at least to govern myself from being so. I reaped little of no Advantage by what I had, and my Expences feemed nothing less to me, for having the more to spend: For, as Bion faid, The hairy Men are as angry as the bald to be pulled; and after you are once accustomed to it, and have once let your Heart upon your Heap, it is no more at your Service, you cannot find in your Heart to break it: 'Tisa Building that you will fancy, must of Necessity all tumble down to Ruin, if you stir but the least Pebble. Necel-

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 305

fity must first take you by the Throat, before you can prevail upon yourfelf to touch it: And I would fooner have pawn'd any Thing I had, or fold a House, and with much less Constraint upon myself, than have made the least Breach in that beloved Purse I had so cunningly laid by. But the Danger was, that a Man cannot easily prescribe certain Limits to this Defire, (for they are hard to find in Things that a Man conceives to be good,) and to stint this good Husbandry so, that it may not degenerate into Avarice: Men still being intent upon adding to the Heap, and increafing the Stock from Sum to Sum, 'till at last they vilely deprive themselves of the Emjoyment of their own proper Goods, and throw all in Referve, without making any Use of them at all. According to this Rule, they are the richest People in the World, who are set to guard the Goals, and to defend the Walls of a wealthy City. All money'd Men I conclude to be covetous. Plato places corporal or human Riches in this Order; Health, Beauty, Strength and Riches; and Riches, fays he, is not blind, but very clear fighted, when illuminated by Prudence. Dionyfius the Son, did a very handsom Act upon this Subject. was informed, that one of the Syracusans had hid a Treafure in the Earth, and thereupon fent to the Man to bring it to him, which he accordingly did, privately referving a small Part of it only to himself, with which he went to another City, where being cured of his Appetite of Hoarding, he began to live at a more liberal Rate; which Dionyfus hearing, caused the rest of his Treasure to be restor'd to him, faying, that fince he had learnt how to use it, he very willingly returned it back unto him.

I continued fome Years in this hoarding Humour, when Iknow not what good Genius fortunately put me out of it, as he did the Syracusan, and made me throw abroad all my Reserve at Random; the Pleasure of a certain Voyage I took of very great Expence, having made me spurn this fond Love of Money under Foot, by which Means I am now fallen into a third Way of Living, (I speak what I think of it) doubtless much more pleasant and moderate, which is, that I live at the Height of my Revenue, sometimes the one, sometimes the other may perhaps exceed, but 'tis very little, and but rarely that they differ at all; I live

nce

rehat,

ent;

ver,

too

ver

this

: 10

ely,

neir

ive.

our-

the ads,

my

was my

be-ally

:OD

fay,

my

e or med as be t

ave

is a able ceffity

306 MONTAIGNE'S Essays.

live from Hand to Mouth, and content myself in having fufficient for my present and ordinary Expence; for as to extraordinary Occasions, all the laying up in the World would never suffice; and'tis the greatest Folly imaginable to expect, that Fortune should ever sufficiently arm us against herfelf. 'Tis with our own Arms that we are to fight her, accidental Ones will betray us in the Pinch of the Business. If I lay up, 'tis for fome near and defigned Expence, and not to purchase Lands, of which I have no Need, but to purchase Pleasure. Non esse cupidum, pecunia est; non esse emacem, vectical est*: Not to be covetous, is Money; not to be a Purchaser, is a Tribute. I neither am in any great Apprehension of wanting, nor in any Defire of getting any more; Divitiarum fructus est in copia; copiam declarat satietas +: The Fruits of Riches lye in abundance, Satiety declares abundance. And I am very well pleafed with myfelf, that this Reformation in me has fallen out in an Age naturally inclined to Avarice, and that I see myself clear'd of a Folly fo common to old Men, and the most ridiculous of all human Follies. Feraulez, a Man who had run through both Fortunes, and found that the Increase of Substance was no Increase of Appetite, either to Eating or Drinking, Sleeping, or the Enjoyment of his Wife; and who, on the other Side, felt the Care of his Œconomy lye heavy upon his Shoulders, as it does on mine; was refolved to please a poor young Man, his faithful Friend, who panted after Riches, by making him a Gift of all his, which was excessively great, and moreover of all he was in the daily Way of getting by the Liberality of Cyru, his good Master, and by the War; conditionally that he should take Care handsomly to maintain, and plentifully to entertain him as his Host, and his Friends; which being accordingly embraced and performed, they afterwards lived very happily together, both of them equally content with the Change of their Condition. An Example that I could imitate with all my Heart. And very much approve the Fortune of an ancient Prelate, whom I fee to have so absolutely stripped himself of his Purse, his Revenue,

+ Ibid.

^{*} Cicero Perad. Ult.

Goods and Evils depend upon Opinion. 307

ng to ld

to ut

nd

to d'd

US

ın

or d

g ls it I p- to venue, and Care of his Expence; committing them one while to one trusty Servant, and another while to another; that he has foun out a long Succession of Years, as ignorant by this Means of his domestick Affairs, as a mere Stranger. The Confidence of another Man's Virtue, is no light Evidence of a Man's own; befides, God is pleased to favour fuch a Confidence, as to what concerns him of whom I am speaking, I see no where a better govern'd Family, nor a House more nobly and constantly maintained than his; happy in this, to have stated his Affairs to so just a Proportion, that his Estate is sufficient to do it without his Care or Trouble, and without any Hindrance, either in the spending or laying it up, to his other more decent and quiet Employments, which are most suitable both to his Place and Liking. Plenty then and Indigence depend upon the Opinion every one has of them; and Riches, no more than Glory or Health, have no more either Beauty or Pleasure, than he is pleased to lend them, by whom they are possess. Every one is well or ill at Ease, according as he finds himself: Not he whom the World believes, but he who himself believes to be so, is content; and in him alone Belief gives itself Being and Reality. Fortune does us neither Good nor Hurt; she only presents us the Matter and the Seed, which our Soul, more powerfully than she, turns and applies as she best pleases; being the sole Cause and fovereign Mistress of her own happy or unhappy Condition. All external Accessions receive Taste and Colour from the internal Constitution, as Clothes warm us, not with their Heat, but our own, which they are fit to cover and keep in; and who would cover a cold Body, would do the same Service for the Cold, for so Snow and Ice are preferved. And after the fame Manner that Study 15 a Torment to a Truant, Abstinence from Wine to a good Companion, Frugality to the Spend-thrift, and Exercise to a Lazy tender-bred Fellow; fo it is of all the rest. The Things are not so painful and difficult of themselves, but our Weakness or Cowardice makes them so. To judge of great and high Matters, requires a fuitable Soul, otherwife we attribute the Vice to them, which is really our own. A ftrait Oar feems crooked in the Water: It does not only import that we see the Thing, but how, and after what Manner we fee it. But after all this, why amongst fo many Discourses, that by so many Arguments persuade Men to despise Death, and endure Pain, can we not find out one that makes for us? And of fo many Sorts of Imaginations as have so prevailed upon others, as to persuade them to do fo, why does not every one apply fome one to himself, the most suitable to his own Humour? If he cannot away with a strong working Apozem to eradicate the Evil, let him at least take a Lenitive to ease it. Opinio of quædam effeminata, at levis: Nec in dolore magis, quam eadem in voluptate: Qua quum liquescimus fluimusque mollitia, apis aculeum fine clamore ferre non possumus. Totum in eo est, ut tibi imperes *: There is a certain Light and effeminate Opnion, and that not more in Pain than it is even in Pleasure itself; by which, whilst we rest and wallow in Ease and Wantonness, we cannot endure so much as the Stinging of a Bee without roaring. All that lyes in it is only this, to command thyself. As to the rest, a Man does not transgress Philosophy, by permitting the Acrimony of Pains and human Frailty to prevail fo much above Measure; for they will at last be reduced to these invincible Replies. If it be ill to live in Necessity, at least there is no Necessity upon a Man to live in Necessity. No Man continues ill long, but by his own Fault. And who has neither the Courage to die, nor the Heart to live: Who will neither refift nor fly, what should a Man do to him?

Montaigne's Essays.

308

* Cicero Tufc. lib. 2.

CHAP.

SESSEE DE SESSEE

ngst ade find maade e to anthe

o est dem

apis

ut lure

and fa

ress

hu-hey

be

na

to nor

P.

CHAP. XLI.

Not to communicate a Man's Honour.

OF all the Follies of the World, that which is most universally received is the Solicitude of Reputation and Glory, which we are fond of to that Degree, as to abandon Riches, Peace, Life and Health, which are effectual and substantial Goods, to pursue this vain Phantom, and empty Word, that has neither Body nor Hold to be taken of it.

La fama ch' inwaghisce a un dolce suono
Gli superbi mortali, & par' si bella
Eun echo, un Sogno, andzi d' un Sogno un' ombra
Ch' ad ogni vento si dilegua, & sgombra*.

Honour, that with fuch an alluring Sound,
Proud Mortals charms, and does appear so fair,
An Eccho, Dream, Shade of a Dream is found, Disperst abroad by ev'ry Breath of Air.

And of all the irrational Humours of Men, it should seem, that even the Philosophers themselves have the most ado, and do the latest disengage themselves from this, as the most resty and obstinate of human Follies. Quia etiam bene proscientis animos tentare non cessat +: Because it ceases not to attack even the wisest and best lettered Minds. There is not any one Vice, of which Reason does so clearly accuse the Vanity, as of that; but it is so deeply rooted in us, that I dare not determine, whether any one ever clearly sequestered himself from it or no. After you have said all, and believed all that has been said to it's Prejudice, it creates so intestine an Inclination in Opposition to your best Arguments.

^{*} Tasso. Canto 10. † Aug. de Civit. Dei.

MONTAIGNE'S Effays.

ments, that you have little Power and Conflancy to refif it: For (as Cicero fays) even those who most controvert it, would yet, that the Books they write should visit the Light under their own Names, and feek to derive Glory from feeming to despise it. All other Things are communicable, and fall into Commerce; we lend our Goods, and stake our Lives for the Necessity and Service of our Friends; but to communicate a Man's Honour, and to rob another with a Man's own Glory, is very rarely feen. And yet we have fome Examples of that Kind. Catulus Luctatius in the Cymbrian War, having done all that in him lay to make his flying Soldiers face about upon the Enemy, ran himself at last away with the rest, and counterfeited the Coward, to the End his Men might rather feem to follow their Captain, than to fly from the Enemy; which was to abandon his own Reputation, to palliate the Shame of others. When Charles the Fifth came into Provence in the Year 1537, its faid, that Antonio de Leva seeing the Emperor positively refolved upon this Expedition, and believing it would redound very much to his Honour, did nevertheless very stiffly oppose it in the Council, to the End that the entire Glory of that Resolution should be attributed to his Matter; and that it might be faid, his own Wisdom and Forelight had been fuch, as that, contrary to the Opinion of all, he had brought about fo great, and fo generous an Enterprize, which was to do him Honour at his own Expence. The Thracian Embassadors, coming to comfort Archileonida, the Mother of Brasidas, upon the Death of her Son, and commending him to that Height, as to fay, he had not left his Like behind him; she rejected this private and particular Commendation, to attribute it to the Publick: Tell me not that (said she) I know the City of Sparta has several Citizens both greater, and of greater Valour than he. In the Battle of Cress, the Prince of Wales, being then very young, had the Vant-guard committed to him, and the main Stress of the Battle happened to be in that Place, which made the Lords that were with him, finding them felves over-match'd, to fend to King Edward, that he would please to advance to their Relief; who thereupon enquiring what Condition his Son was in, and being answered, that he was yet living, and on Horse-back: I should then do

311

Not to communicate a Man's Honour.

M

mind

TUC

to 1 a ve

the

ke

elf

rd,

on en

tis

re

ht

1e

10 ie

2F

ne al

n

ry

0

him Wrong (faid the King) now to go, and deprive him of the Honour of winning this Battle he has fo long, and fo bravely disputed, what Hazard soever he runs, it shall be entirely his own: And accordingly would neither go nor fend, knowing that if he went, it would be faid all had been lost without his Succour, and that the Honour of the Victory would be wholly attributed to him. Semper enim quod postremum adjectum est, id rem totam videtur traxisse. For the last Stroke to a Business seems to draw along with it the Performance of the whole Action. Many at Rome thought, and would usually say, that the greatest of Scipio's Acts were, in Part, due to Lelius, whose constant Practice it was still to advance, and shoulder Scipio's Grandeur and Renown, without any Care of his own. And Theopompus, King of Sparta, to him who told him the Republick could not miscarry, fince he knew so well how to command. 'Tis rather (answered he) because the People know fo well how to obey. As Women succeeding to Peerages, had, notwithstanding their Sex, the Privilege to assist, and give in their Votes in the Causes that appertained to the Jurisdiction of Peers: So the Ecclefiastical Peers, notwithstanding their Profession, were obliged to assist our Kings in their Wars, not only with their Friends and Servants, but in their own Persons. As the Bishop of Beauvais did, who being with Philip Augustus at the Battle of Bouvines, had a notable Share in that Action; but he did not think it fit for him to participate in the Fruit and Glory of that violent and bloody Trade. He with his own Hand reduced feveral of the Enemy that Day to his Mercy, whom he delivered to the first Gentleman he met, either to kill, or to receive them to Quarter, referring the Execution to another Hand. As also did William, Earl of Salisbury, to Messire Jane de Nefle, with a like Subtlety of Conscience to the other we named before, he would kill, but not wound him, and for that Reason ever fought with a Mace. And a certain Person of my Time, being reproached by the King, that he had laid Hands on a Priest, stiffly and positively deny'd he had done any fuch Thing: The Meaning of which was, he had cudgell'd and kick'd him.

CHAP.

CHAP. XLII.

Of the Inequality amongst us.

PLutarch says somewhere, that he does not find so great a Difference betwixt Beast and Beast, as he does betwixt Man and Man. Which is said in Reference to the internal Qualities and Perfections of the Soul. And in Truth, I find, (according to my poor Judgment,) so vast a Distance betwixt Epaminondas, and some that I know, (who are yet Men of common Sense,) that I would willingly enhance upon Plutarch, and say, that there is more Difference betwixt such and such a Man, than there is betwixt such a Man and such a Beast:

Hem vir viro quid præstat *!

— How much alas, One Man another doth furpass!

And that there are as many and innumerable Degrees of Wits, as there are Cubits betwixt this and Heaven. But as touching the Estimate of Men, 'tis strange, that, ourselves excepted, no other Creature is esteemed beyond it's proper Qualities. We commend a Horse for his Strength and Sureness of Foot.

Sic laudamus equum, facili cui plurima palma Fervet, & exultat rauco victoria circo †.

So we commend the Horse for being fleet, Who many Palms by Breath and Speed does get, And which the Trumpets in the Circle grace, With their hoarse Clangors for his well-run Race.

* Ter. For. Act. 5. Sc. 3. + Juvenal, Sat. 8.

and not for his rich Caparisons; a Greyhound for his share of Heels, not for his fine Collar; a Hawk for her Wing, not for her Gesses and Bells. Why, in like Manner, do we not value a Man for what is properly his own? He has a great Train, a beautiful Palace, so much Credit, so many thousand Pounds a Year, and all these are about him, but not in him. You will not buy a Pig in a Poke: If you cheapen a Horse, you will see him stript of his Housing clothes, you will see him naked and open to your Eye; or if he be clothed, as they anciently were wont to present them to Princes to sell, 'tis only on the less important Parts, that you may not so much consider the Beauty of his Colour, or the Breadth of his Crupper, as principally to examine his Limbs, Eyes and Feet, which are the Members of greatest Use:

Regibus hic mos est, ubi equos mercantur, opertos Suspiciunt, ne si facies, ut sæpe, decora Molli fulta pede est, emptorem inducat hiantem, Quod pulchræ clunes, breve quod caput, ardua cervix*.

When Kings Steeds cloth'd, as 'tis their Manner, buy, They straight examine very curiously, Lest alshort Head, a thin and well rais'd Crest, A broad spread Buttock, and an ample Chest, Should all be propt with an old beaten Hoof, To gull the Buyer when they come to Proof.

Why in giving your Estimate of a Man, do you prize him wrapt and mussled up in Clothes? He then discovers nothing to you, but such Parts as are not in the least his own; and conceals those, by which alone one may rightly judge of his Value. 'Tis the Price of the Blade that you enquire into, and not of the Scabbard: You would not, peradventure, bid a Farthing for him, if you saw him stripped. You are to judge him by himself, and not by what he wears. And as one of the Ancients very pleasantly said, Do you know why you repute him tall? You reckon withal the

Vol. I. # Hor. lib. 1. Sat. 2.

Heighth

Heighth of his Chepines, whereas the Pedestal is no Part of the Statue. Measure him without his Stilts, let him lay aside his Revenues and his Titles, let him present himself in his Shirt, then examine if his Body be sound and spritely, active and disposed to perform it's Functions? What Soul has he? Is it beautiful, capable, and happily provided of all her Faculties? Is she rich of what is her own, or of what she has borrowed? Has Fortune no Hand in the Affair? Can she, without winking, stand the Lightning of Swords? Is she indifferent, whether her Life expire by the Mouth, or through the Throat? Is she settled, even and content? This is what is to be examined, and by that you are to judge of the vast Differences betwixt Man and Man. Is he

Sapiens, sibique imperiosus

Quem neque pauperies, neque mors, neque vincula terrent, Responsare cupidinibus, contemnere honores
Fortis, & in seipso totus teres atque rotundus, Externi nequid valeat per læve morari,
In quem manca ruit semper fortuna *?

Wise, and commanding o'er his Appetite.
One whom, nor Want, nor Death, nor Bonds can fright,
To check his Lusts, and Honours scorn, so stout,
And in himself so round and clear throughout,
That no external Thing can stop his Course,
And on whom Fortune vainly tries her Force.

fuch a Man is raifed five hundred Fathoms above Kingdoms and Dutchies, he is an absolute Monarch in and to himself.

fi S A th you th

Sapiens Pol ipse fingit fortunam sibi +.

The wife Man his own Fortune makes.

What remains for him to covet or defire?

* Hor. lib. 2. Sat. 7. † Plaut. Tri. Act. 2. Sc. 2.

Of the Inequality among it us.

315

Nonne videmus
Nil aliud fibi naturam latrare, nifi ut quoi
Corpore sejunctus dolor absit, mente fruatur Jucundo sensu, cura semotus metuque * ?

We fee that Nature to no more aspires;
Nor to herself a greater Good requires,
Than that, whose Body is from Dolors free,
He should his Mind with more Serenity,
And a more pleasing Sense enjoy, quite clear,
From those two grand Disturbers, Grief and Fear.

Compare with fuch a one the common Rabble of Mankind, stupid and mean-spirited, servile, instable, and continually floating with the Tempest of various Passions, that toffes and tumbles them to and fro, and all depending upon others, and you will find a greater Distance than betwixt Heaven and Earth; and yet the Blindness of common Usage is such, that we make little or no Account of it. Whereas, if we confider a Peafant and a King, a Nobleman and a Clown, a Magistrate and a private Man, a rich Man and a poor, there appears a vast Disparity, though they differ no more (as a Man may fay) than in their Breeches. In Thrace the King was distinguished from his People after a very pleasant Manner; he had a Religion by himself, a God of his own, and which his Subjects were not to presame to adore, which was Mercury; whilst, on the other Side, he disdained to have any Thing to do with theirs, Mars, Bacchus, and Diana. And yet they are no other than Pictures, that make no effential Dissimilitude; for as you see Actors in a Play, representing the Person of a Duke or an Emperor, upon the Stage, and immediately after, in the Tiring-Room, return to their true and original Condition; fo the Emperor, whose Pomp and Lustre does fo dazzle you in Publick, Silicet, & grandes viridi cum luce smaragdi Auro includuntur, teriturque Thalassina vestis Assidue, & veneris sudorem exercita petat +.

* Luc. 1. 2.

+ Luc. 1. 4.

Y 2

Great

Great Emeralds richly are in Gold enchast, To dart green Lustre, and the Sea-green Vest Continually is worn and rubb'd to Frets, Whilst it imbibes the Juice that Venus sweats.

do but peep behind the Curtain, and you'll fee nothing more than an ordinary Man, and peradventure more contemptible than the meanest of his Subjects. Ille beatus introrsum est, is instructed that the other is but a counterfeit Felicity. Cowardice, Irresolution, Ambition, Spite and Envy, are as predominant in him as in another.

Non enim gazæ, neque consularis Summowet lictor, miseros tumultus Mentis, & curas laqueatæ circum Tecta volantes †.

For neither Wealth, Honours, nor Offices, Can the wild Tumults of the Mind appeale, Nor chase those Cares, that with unwearied Wings Hover about the Palaces of Kings.

Nay, Solitude and Fear attack him, even in the Center of his Battalions.

Reveraque metus hominum, curæque sequaces, Nec metuunt sonitus armorum, nec sera tela, Audasterque inter Reges, rerumque potentes Versantur, neque sulgorem reverentur ab auro 1.

For Fears and Cares warring with human Hearts, Fear not the Clash of Arms, nor Points of Darts; But with great Kings and Potentates make bold, Maugre their Purple and their glitt'ring Gold.

Do Fevers, Gouts and Apoplexies spare them any more than one of us? When old Age hangs heavy upon a Prince';

* Seneca, Ep. 115. + Horace, lib. 2. Ode 16. ‡ Luc. l. 2. Shoulders, Shoulders, can the Yeomen of his Guard ease him of the Burthen? When he is astonished with the Apprehension of Death, can the Gentlemen of his Bed-Chamber comfort and assure him? When Jealously, or any other Capricio, swims in his Brain, can our Compliments and Ceremonies resore him to his good Humour? The Canopy embroidered with Pearl and Gold he lyes under, has no Virtue against a violent Fit of the Stone or Colick.

Nec calidæ citius decedunt corpore febres Textilibus si in picturis, ostroque rubenti Jacteris, quam si plebeia in weste cubandum est*.

Nor fooner will a Calenture depart, Altho' in figur'd Tiffues lodg'd thou art, Than if thy homely Couch were meanly spread With poorest Blankets of the coarsest Thread.

The Flatterers of Alexander the Great possessed him, that he was the Son of Jupiter: But being one Day wounded, and observing the Blood stream from his Wound, What say you now, (my Friends) said he, is not this Blood of a crimfon Colour, and purely Human? This is not of the Complexion with that which Homer makes to issue from the wounded Gods. The Poet Hermedorus had writ a Poem in Honour of Antigonus, wherein he called him the Son of the Sun: But he that has the emptying of my Close-stool (said Antigonus) will find to the contrary. He is but a Man at best, and if he be deformed, or ill qualified from his Birth, the Empire of the Universe can neither mend his Shape nor his Nature;

Hunc rapiant, quidquid culcaverit bic, rosa fiat †.

Tho' Maids should ravish him, and where he goes, In ev'ry Step he takes should spring a Rose;

* Luc. 1. 2.

+ Persius, Sat. 2.

wha

ore

ers

MONTAIGNE'S Estays:

318

what of all that, if he be a Fool and a Sot, even Pleasure and good Fortune are not relished without Vigour and Understanding.

Hæc perinde sunt, ut illius animus, qui ea possidet, Qui uti scit, ei bona, illi, qui non utitur recte, mala*.

Things to the Souls of their Possessiors square; Goods if well us'd, if ill, they Evils are.

Whatever the Benefits of Fortune are, they yet require a Palate fit to relish and taste them: 'Tis Fruition, and not Possession, that renders us happy.

Non domus, & fundus, non æris acervus & auri, Ægroto domini deduxit corpore febres, Non animo curas, valeat possessor oportet, Qui comportatis rebus bene cogitat uti, Qui cupit, aut metuit, juvat illum sic domus aut res, Ut lippum pietæ Tabulæ, fomenta podagram †.

Mannors, or Heaps of Brass and Gold, afford No Ease at all to their Febrifick Lord; Nor can they cure his Cares; 'tis requisite The Good's Possessor know the Use of it. Who fears or covets, these so help him out, As Pictures blind Folks, Cataplasms the Gout.

He is a Sot, his Taste is palled and flat; he no more enjoys what he has, than one that has a Cold relishes the Flavour of Canary; or than a Horse is sensible of his rich Caparison. Plato is in the right, when he tells us, that Health, Beauty, Vigour and Riches, and all the other Things called Goods, are equally Evil to the Unjust, as Good to the Just, and the Evil on the contrary the same. And therefore, where either the Body or the Mind are in Disorder, to what Use serve these external Conveniencies? Considering, that the least Prick with a Pin, or the least Passion of the Soul, is sufficient to deprive us of the Pleasure of being sole Monarch of the World. At the first Twitch of the Gout, it signifies much to be called Sire, and your Majesty;

^{*} Ter. Heaut. Act. 1. + Horace, lib. 1. Epift. 2. fufficient

Of the Inequality among st us.

319

Totus, & argento conflatus, totus & auro*.

Altho' his Chests are cramm'd, whilst they will hold, With immense Sums of Silver Coin and Gold.

does he not forget his Palaces and Grandeurs? If he be angry, can his being a Prince keep him from looking red, and looking pale, and grinding his Teeth like a Mad-man? Now if he be a Man of Parts, and well descended, Royalty adds very little to his Happiness:

Si ventri bene, si lateri est pedibusque tuis, nil Divitiæ poterant regales addere majus +.

If thou art right and found from Head to Foot, A King's Revenue can add nothing to't.

He discerns, 'tis nothing but Counterfeit and Gullery. Nay, perhaps, he would be of King Seleucus's Opinion, That he that knew the Weight of a Scepter, would not deign to sloop to take it up; which he said, in Reference to the great and painful Duty incumbent upon a good King. Doubtless it can be no easy Task to rule others, when we find it so hard a Matter to govern ourselves. And as to the Thing Dominion, that seems so sweet and charming, the Frailty of human Wisdom, and the Difficulty of Choice in Things that are new and doubtful, to us considered, I am very much of Opinion, that it is much more pleasant to sollow than to lead; and that it is a great Settlement and Satisfaction of Mind, to have only one Path to walk in, and to have none to answer for, but for a Man's self;

Ut satius multo jam sit, parere quietum, Quam regere imperio res velle ...

* Hor. lib. 1. El. 2. + Hor. lib. 1. Ep. 12. ‡ Lucret. lib. 5. Y 4

he ein

is

So that 'tis better calmly to obey, Than in the Storms of State to rule and fway.

To which we may add that Saying of Cyrus, That no Man was fit to rule, but he, who in his own Worth, was of greater Value than all those he was to govern: But King Hiero in Xenophon, says farther, That in the Fruition even of Pleasure itself, they are in a worse Condition than private Men; forasmuch as the Opportunities and Facility they have of commanding those Things at Will, takes off from the Delight:

Pinguis amor, nimiumque potens, in tædia nobis Vertitur, & Stomacho dulcis ut esca necet*.

Too potent Love, in Loathing never ends, As highest Sauce the Stomach most offends.

Can we think, that the Singing-Boys of the Quire take any great Delight in their own Musick? The Satiety does rather render it troublesom and tedious to them. Featts, Balls, Masquerades and Tiltings, delight such as but rarely fee, and defire to be at such Solemnities: But having been frequent at fuch Entertainments, the Relish of them grows flat and infipid: Nay, Women (the greatest Temptation) do not fo much delight those who make a common Prace tice of the Sport. He who will not give himself Leisure to be thirsty, can never find the true Pleasure of Drinking. Farces and tumbling Tricks are pleasant to the Spectators, but a Pain to those by whom they are performed. And that this is effectually so, we see that Princes divert themfelves sometimes in disguising their Qualities, a-while to depose themselves, and to stoop to the poor and ordinary Way of Living of the meanest of their People.

> Plerumque gratæ Principibus vires. Mundæque parvo sub lare pauperum Cænæ sine aulæis, & ostro, Sollicitum explicuere frontem †.

* Ovid. Amor. 1. 2. Eleg. 19. + Hor. car. lib. 3. Ode 29.

E'en Princes with Variety tempted are, Which makes them oft feed on clean homely Fare, In a poor Hut, laying afide the State, Purple and Pomp, which should on Grandeur wait, In such a Solitude to smooth the Frown, Forc'd by the weighty Pressure of a Crown.

Nothing is so distastful and disappointing, as Abundance. What Appetite would not be baffled, to fee three hundred Women at his Mercy, as the Grand Seignior has in his Seraglio? And what Fruition of Pleasure, or Taste of Recreation of his Ancestors, did he reserve to himself, who never went a Hawking without seven thousand Falconers? And besides all this, I fancy that this Lustre of Grandeur. brings with it no little Disturbance and Uneafiness upon the Enjoyment of the most tempting Pleasures: They are too conspicuous, and lye too open to every one's View. Neither do I know to what End they should any more require them to conceal their Errors, fince what is only reputed Indifcretion in us, they know very well the People brand with the Names of Tyranny, and Contempt of the Laws in them; and befides their Proclivity to Vice, are apt to cenfure that as a heightning Pleasure to themselves to insult over the Laws, and to trample upon public Ordinances. Plato, indeed, in his Gorgeas defines a Tyrant to be one, who in a City has Licence to do whatever his own Will leads him to. And by reason of his Impunity, the over acting and Publication of their Vices, does oft-times more Mifchief than the Vice itself. Every one fears to be pry'd into, and discover'd in their evil Courses; but Princes are, even to their very Gestures, Looks, and Thoughts, the People conceiving they have Right and Title to cenfure, and be Judges of them: Besides, that the Blemishes of the Great, naturally appear greater, by reason of the Eminency and Lustre of the Place where they are seated; and that a Mole or a Wart appears greater in them, than the greatest Deformity in others. And this is the Reason why the Poets feign the Amours of Jupiter to be perform'd in the Disguises of so many borrow'd Shapes, that amongst the many amorous Practices they lay to his Charge, there is only one, as I remember, where he appears in his own Majesty and Grandeur. But let us return to Hiero, who complains of the Inconveniencies he found in his Royalty, in that he could not look abroad, and travel the World at Liberty, being as it were a Prisoner to the Bounds and Limits of his own Dominion: And that in all his Actions he was evermore furrounded with an importunate Crowd. And in Truth, to fee our Kings fit all alone at Table, environed with fo many People prating about them, and lo many Strangers staring upon them, as they always are, I have often been mov'd, rather to pity than to envy their Condition. King Alphonfus was wont to fay, that in this, Affes were in a better Condition than Kings, their Maffers permitting them to feed at their own Ease and Pleasure; a Favour that Kings cannot obtain of their Servants. And it would never come into my Head, that it could be of any great Benefit to the Life of a Man of Sense, to have twenty Reople prating about him, when he is at Stool; or that the Services of a Man of ten thousand Livres a Year, or that has taken Cafal, or defended Siena, should be either more commodious or more acceptable to him, than those of a good Groom of the Chamber, that understands his Place. The Advantages of Sovereignty are but imaginary upon the Matter: Every Degree of Fortune has in it some Image of Principality. Cæfar calls all the Lords of France, having Free-Franchise within their own Demeans Roylets; and in Truth, the Name of Sire excepted, they go pretty far towards Kingship; for do but look into the Provinces remote from Court, as Brittany for Example, take Notice of the Attendance, the Vasfals, the Officers, the Employments, Service, Ceremony and State of a Lord that lives retir'd from Court, is constant to his own House, and that has been bred up amongst his own Tenants and Servants; and observe withal, the Flight of his Imagination, there is nothing more royal; he hears talk of his Mafter once a Year, as of a King of Persia, or Peru, without taking any farther Notice of him, than some remote Kindred, his Secretary keeps in some musty Record. And, to speak the Truth, our Laws are easy enough, so easy, that a Gentleman of France scarce feels the Weight of Sovereignty pinch his Shoulders above twice in his Life. Real and effectual

in

at

j.

ns

fo

I

yyeute

a

ं वर्ष कर्त म दे ते न

Subjection only concerns such amongst us as voluntarily thrust their Necks under the Yoke, and who design to get Wealth and Honours by fuch Services: For a Man that loves his own Fire-fide, and can govern his House without falling by the Ears with his Neighbours, or engaging in Suits of Law, is as free as a Duke of Venice. Paucos servitus, plures servitutem tenet. Servitude seizes on few, but many seize on her. But that which Hiero is most concern'd at, is, that he finds himfelf stripp'd of all Friendship, and depriv'd of all natural Society, wherein the true and most perfect Fruition of human Life confifts. For what Testimony of Affection and good Will can I extract from him, that owes me, whether he will or no, all that he is able to do? Can I form any Assurance of his real Respect to me, from his humble Way of speaking, and submissive Behaviour, which when they are Ceremonies, it is not in his Choice to deny? The Honour we receive from those that fear us, is not Honour, those Respects are paid to my Royalty, and not to me.

> Maximum hoc Regni bonum est, Quod facta domini cogitur populus sui Quam ferre, tam laudare*.

'Tis the great Benefit of Kings, that they, Who are by Law subjected to their Sway, Are bound in all their Princes say or do, Not only to submit, but praise it too.

Do I not fee, that the wicked and the good King, he that is hated and he that is belov'd, has the one as much Reverence paid him as the other? My Predecessor was, and my Successor shall be serv'd with the same Ceremony and State. If my Subjects do me no Harm, 'tis no Evidence of any good Assection; why should I look upon it as such, seeing it is not in their Power if they would? No one follows me, or obeys my Commands upon the Account of any Friendship betwixt him and me; there can be no contract-

* Seneca Theift. Act. 2. Sca. 1.

ing

ing of Friendship, where there is so little Relation and Correspondence: My own Height has put me out of the Familiarity of, and Intelligence with Men: There is too great Disparity and Disproportion betwixt us; they follow me either upon the Account of Decency and Custom: or rather my Fortune than me, to encrease their own: All they say to me, or do for me, is forc'd and dissembled, their Liberty being on all Parts restrain'd by the great Power and Authority I have over them. I fee nothing about me but what is diffembled and difguifed. The Emperor Julian being one Day applauded for his exact Justice; I should be proud of these Praises, said he, did they come from Perions that durst condemn, or disapprove the contrary, in Cafe I should do it. All the real Advantages of Princes are common to them with Men of meaner Condition. 'Tis for the Gods to mount winged Horses, and feed upon Ambrofia: Earthly Kings have no other Sleep, nor other Appetite than we; the Steel they arm themselves withal, is of no better Temper than that we also use; their Crowns do neither defend them from the Rain, nor Sun. Dioclesian, who wore a Crown fo fortunate and rever'd, refign'd it, to retire himself to the Felicity of a private Life: And some Time after, the Necessity of publick Affairs requiring that he should re-assume his Charge, he made Answer to those who came to court him to it, You would not offer, (faid he) to perfuade me to this, had you feen the fine Order of Trees I have planted in my Orchard, and the fair Melons I have fowed in my Garden. In the Opinion of Anacharfis, the happiest State of Government would be, where all other Things being equal, Precedency should be measur'd out by the Virtues, and Repulses by the Vices of Men. When King Pyrrhus prepar'd for his Expedition into Italy, his wife Counsellor Cyneas, to make him sensible of the Vanity of his Ambition: Well, Sir, (faid he) to what End do you make all this mighty Preparation? To make mylelf Master of Italy, (reply'd the King). And what after that is done, (faid Cyneas?) I will pass over into Gaul and Spain, faid the other. And what then? I will then go to subdue Africk; and lastly, when I have brought the wholeWorld to my Subjection, I will fit down, and rest content at my own Ease. For God Sake, Sir, (reply'd Cyneas) tell me what hinders you, if you please, from being now in the Condition you speak of? Why do you not now at this Instant, settle yourself in the State you seem to aim at, and spare the Labour and Hazard you interpose?

Nimirum quia non bene norat quæ esset habendi Finis, & omnino quoad crescat vera voluptas *.

The End of being rich he did not know; Nor to what Pitch Felicity should grow.

I will conclude with an old Verficle, that I think very pat to the Purpose.

Mores cuique sui fingunt fortunam *.

Himself, not Fortune, ev'ry one must blame, Since Men's own Manners do their Fortunes frame.

REFERENCE DE

CHAP. XLIII.

Of Sumptuary Laws.

THE Way by which our Laws attempt to regulate idle and vain Expences in Meat and Clothes, feem to be quite contrary to the End defign'd. The true Way would be to beget in Men a Contempt of Silks and Gold, as vain, frivolous, and useless; whereas we augment to them the Honours and enhance the Value of such Things, which sure is a very improper Way to create a Disgust. For to enact, that none but Princes shall eat Turbes, shall wear Velvet, or Gold Lace, and interdict these Things to the People, what is it but to bring them into a greater Esteem, and to set every one more agog to eat and wear them? Let Kings (in God's Name) leave off these Ensigns of Grandeur, they have others enough besides; those Excesses are more excusable in any other, than a Prince. We may learn by ^{*} Lucret. 1. 5. § Corn Nep. in vit. A. Hici.

the Example of feveral Nations, better Ways of exterior Distinction of Quality (which truly I conceive to be very requifite in a State) enough, without fostering up this Corruption, and manifest Inconvenience to this Esfect. 'Tis strange, how suddenly, and with how much Ease, Custom, in these different Things, establishes itself, and becomes Authority. We had fcarce worn Cloth a Year (in Compliance with the Court) for the Mourning of Henry the Second, but that Silks were already grown into fuch Contempt with every one, that a Man fo clad, was presently concluded a Citizen. The Silks were divided betwixt the Phylicians and Chirurgeons, and though all other People almost wentin the same Habit, there was notwithstanding in one Thing or other, sufficient Distinction of the Calling, and Conditions of Men. How fuddenly do greafy Chamois Doublets become the Fashion in our Armies, whilst all Neatness and Riches of Habit fall into Contempt? Let Kings but lead the Dance, and begin to leave off this Expence, and in a Month the Bufiness will be done throughout the Kingdom without an Edict; we shall all follow. It should be rather proclaim'd on the contrary, that no one should wear Scarlet or Goldfmith's Work, but Whores and Tumblers. Zeleucus, with the like Invention, reclaim'd the corrupted Manners of the Locrians; whose Laws were, That no free Women should be allow'd any more than one Maid to follow her, unless she was drunk: Nor was to stir out of the City by Night, wear Jewels of Gold about her, or go in an embroidered Robe, unless she was a profest and publick Whore: The Bravo's, and Ruffians excepted, no Man was to wear a Gold Ring, nor be feen in one of those effeminate Vests woven in the City of Miletum. By which infamous Exceptions, he discreetly diverted his Citizens from Superfluities and pernicious Pleasures, and it was a Project of great Utility to attract Men by Honour and Ambition to their Duty and Obedience. Our Kings may do what they please in such external Reformations, their own Inclinations stand in this Case for a Law. Quicquid Principes faciunt, pracipere videntur*. What Princes themselves do, they seem to enjoin others. Whatever is done at Court, passes for a Rule through the rest of France. Let the Courtiers but fall out with these abominable Breeches, that discover so much of those Parts which should be conceal'd: These great-bellied Doublets, that make us look like I know not what; and are so unfit to admit of Arms; these long effeminate Locks of Hair; this foolish Custom of kissing what we present to our Equals, and our Hands in faluting them; a Ceremony in former Times only due to Princes: And that a Gentleman shall appear in Place of Respect without his Sword, unbuttoned and untruss'd, as though he came from the House-of-Office; and that, contrary to the Custom of our Fore-fathers, and the particular Privilege of the Nobless of this Kingdom, we shall stand a long Time bare to them in what Place soever, and the same to a hundred others, fo many Tierces and Quarts of Kings we have got now-a-days, and also other the like Innovations and degenerate Customs; they will see them all presently vanish'd and cry'd down. These are, 'tis true, but superficial Er-1015; but however, of ill Consequence; and 'tis enough to inform us, that the whole Fabrick is crazy and tottering, when we fee the rough-Cast of our Walls to cleave and split. Plato in his Laws, esteems nothing of more pestiferous Consequence to his City, than to give Young Men the Liberty of introducing any Change in their Habits, Gestures, Dances, Songs and Exercises, from one Form to another; shifting from this to that, hunting after Novelties, and applauding the Inventers; by which Means Manners are corrupted, and the old Institutions come to be nauseated and despised. In all Things, saving only in those that are evil, a Change is to be fear'd; even the Change of Seafons, Winds, Viands and Humours. And no Laws are in their true Credit, but fuch to which God has given fo long a Continuance, that no one knows their Beginning, or that there ever was any other.

* Quinet. Decla. 4.

H

CHAP.

CHAP. XLIV.

Of Sleep.

Eason directs, that we should always go the same way; but not always the same Pace. And confequently though a wife Man ought not so much to give the Reins to human Passions, as to let them deviate him from the right Path; he may, notwithstanding, without Prejudice to his Duty, leave it to them to hasten, or to slacken his Speed, and not fix himself like a motionless, and indensible Colossus. Could Virtue itself put on Flesh and Blood, I believe the Pulse would beat faster going on to an Assault, than in going to Dinner: That is to say, there is a Necessity she should beat, and be mov'd upon this Account. I have taken Notice, as of an extraordinary Thing, of some great Men, who in the highest Enterprizes, and greatest Dangers, have detain'd themselves in so settled and derene a Calm, as not at all to hinder their usual Gaiety, or break their Sleep. Alexander the Great on the Day assigned for that furious Battle betwixt him and Darius, llept to profoundly, and fo long in the Morning, that Parmenio was forc'd to enter his Chamber, and coming to his Bed-fide to call him feveral Times by his Name, the Time to go to fight compelling him fo to do. The Emperor Otho, having put on a Resolution to kill himself the same Night, after having settled his domestick Affairs, divided his Money amongst his Servants, and fet a good Edge upon a Sword he had made Choice of for the Purpole, and now staying only to be fatisfied whether all his Friends were retir'd in Safety, he fell into so sound a Sleep, that the Gentlemen of his Chamber heard him snore. Death of this Emperor has in it Circumstances parallelling that of the great Cato, and particularly this beforerelated: For Cate being ready to dispatch himself, whilsthe only staid his Hand in Expectation of the Return of a Melsenger he had sent, to bring him News whether the

Shi o Pub v v MS C at Ath E hith

W

af

an Tr

the

tha

Val

an

Ver

pel

enators he had fent away, were put out from the Port of Utica, he fell into fo found a Sleep, that they heard him into the next Room; and he whom he had fent to the Port. having awak'd him to let him know, that the tempestuous Weather had hindred the Senators from putting to Sea; he dispatch'd away another Messenger, and composing himfelf again in the Bed, fettled again to Sleep, and did fo, till by the Return of the last Messenger, he had certain Intelligence they were gone. We may here further compare him with Alexander too, in that great and dangerous Storm that threatned him by the Sedition of the Tribune Metellus, who attempting to publish a Decree for the calling in of Pompey with his Army into the City, at the Time of Catiline's Conspiracy, was only, and that stoutly oppos'd by Cato, fo that very sharp Language and bitter Menaces pass'd betwixt them in the Senate about that Affair; but it was the next Day in the Fore-noon, that the Controverly was to be decided; where Metellus, besides the Favour of the People, and of Cafar, (at that Time of Pom-My's Faction) was to appear accompanied with a Rabble of Slaves and Fencers; and Cate only fortified with his own Courage and Constancy; so that his Relations, Domesticks, and leveral virtuous People of his Friends were in great Apprehensions for him. And to that Degree, that some there were, who pass'd over the whole Night without Sleep, lating, or Drinking, for the manifest Danger they saw him running into; of which his Wife and Sifters did nothing but weep, and torment themselves in his House; whereas he, on the contrary, comforted every one, and alter having supp'd after his usual Manner, went to Bed, and slept profoundly till Morning, that one of his Fellow-Tribunes rouz'd him to go to the Encounter. The Knowledge we have of the Greatness of this Man's Courage, by the rest of his Life, may warrant us securely to judge, that his Indifference proceeded from a Soul fo much ele-Vated above such Accidents, that he disdain'd to let it take any more hold of his Fancy, than any other ordinary Adventure. In the Naval Engagement, which Augustus won against Sextius Pompeius in Sicily, just as they were to begin the Fight, he was to fast asleep, that his Friends were compell'd to wake him to give the Signal of Battle: And this VOL. I.

was it that gave Mark Anthony afterwards occasion to reproach him, that he had not the Courage so much as with open Eyes, to behold the Order of his own Squadrons, and not to have dar'd to prefent himfelf before the Soldiers, till first Agrippa had brought him News of the Victory obtain'd. But as to the Bufiness of young Marius, who did much worse (for the Day of the last Battle, against Sylla, after he had order'd his Army, given the Word and Signal of Battel, he laid him down under the Shade of a Tree to repose himself, and fell so fast asleep, that the Rout, and Flight of his Men could hardly awake him, having seen nothing of the Fight) he is said to have been at that Time so extremely spent, and worn out with labour and want of Sleep that Nature could hold out no longer. Now upon what has been faid, the Phyficians may determine, whether Sleep be fo necessary that our Lives depend upon it: For we read that King Perseus of Macedon being Prisoner at Rome, was wak'd to Death! but Pliny instances such as have lived long without Sleep. Herodotus speaks of Nations, where the Men sleep and wake by half Years: And they who write the Life of the wife Epimenides, affirm, that he flept seven and fifty Years together.

it

bu

ger

hii

M

Ar

TOU

on

in

Wa

he fro reli

abo

the

the

that

Nic

they great das: In the white tude

Way

Real Judg

1001

Prov

toch

WOU

him

ing h

Porv

SAMPLE SERVICE COMES

CHAP. XLV.

Of the Battle of Dreux.

OUR Battle of Dreux, is remarkable for several extraordinary Accidents: But such Men as have no great Kindness for the Duke of Guise, nor much savour his Reputation, are willing to have him thought to blame, and that his making a Halt, and delaying Time with the Forces he commanded, whilst the Constable who was General of the Army was raked through and through with the Enemies Artillery, his Battalion routed, and himself taken Prisoner; is not to be excus'd: And that he had much better have ran the Hazard of charging the Enemy in the Flank, than staying for the Advantage of falling in upon the

the Rear, to suffer so great and so important a Loss. But, besides what the Event demonstrated, who will consider it without Passion or Prejudice, will easily be induced to confess, that the Aim and Defign not of a Captain only, but of every private Soldier ought to look at the Victory in general; and that no particular Occurrences, how nearly loever they may concern his own Interest, should divert him from that Pursuit. Philopæmen, in an Encounter with Machanidas, having fent before a good firong Party of his Archers, to begin the Skirmish, which were by the Enemy routed and purfued; who purfuing them, and pushing on the Fortune of their Arms in the Heat of Victory; and in that Pursuit passing by the Battalion where Philopæmen was, though his Soldiers were impatient to fall on, yet he was better temper'd, and did not think fit to stir from his Post, nor to present himself to the Enemy to telieve his Men, but having suffer'd them to be chas'd about the Field, and cut in Pieces before his Face, then charged in upon their Body of Foot, when he faw them left naked by their Horse; and notwithstanding that they were Lacedamonians, yet taking them in the Nick, when thinking themselves secure of the Victory. they began to disorder their Ranks, he did his Business with great Facility, and then put himself in Pursuit of Machanidos: Which Case is very like that of Monsseur de Guise. In that bloody Battle betwixt Agefilaus, and the Bactions, which Xenophon, who was prefent at it, reports to be the ndeft and most bloody that he had ever seen, Agefilaus ward the Advantage that Fortune prefented him, to let the Banians Battalion pass by, and then to charge them in the Rear, how certain foever he made himself of the Victory, adging it would rather be an Effect of Conduct than Vaor, to proceed that Way: And therefore to fhew his frowefs, rather chofe, with a wonderful Ardour of Courage ocharge them in the Front; but he was well beaten, and wounded for his Pains, and constrain'd at last to difingage hmfelf, and to take the Courfe he had at first neglected, openmghis Battalion to give Way to this Torrent of the Baotians lory, and being past by, taking Notice that they march'd in Disorder, like Men that thought themselves out of Danger, he then purfu'd, and charg'd them in Flank and Rear;

:83

of 10.

ch

he

on

yet could not prevail so far as to bring it to so general a Rout, but that they leisurely retreated, still facing about upon him, till they were retired into Safety.

nu

Ki

ear

of the my his Ga Ma

her

An Na

No

her tha

ing Ma

Av

of his

Ma

tha

a C tha

WI

Th Pyt

and ted

We

and

the

Rei

ly f

CHAP. XLVI.

Of Names.

HAT Variety of Herbs soever are shuffled toge ther in the Dish, yet the whole Mass is swallow'd up in one Name of a Sallet. In like Manner, under the Consideration of Names, I will make a Hodge-podge of differing Articles. Every Nation has certain Names, that, I know not why, are taken in no good Sense, as with us, John, William, and Benedict. In the Genealogy of Princes also there seems to be certain Names fatally affected, as the Ptolemies of Egypt, the Henry's of England, the Charles's of France, the Baldwins of Flanders, and the Williams of our ancient Aquitaine, from whence 'is faid, the Name of Guyenne has it's Derivation; which would feem far fetch'd, were there not as rude Derivations in Plato himself. 'Tis a very frivolous Thing in itell, but nevertheless worthy to be recorded for the Strangeness of it, which is writ by an Eye-witness; that Henry Duke of Normandy, Son of Henry the Second, King of England, making a great Feast in France, the Concourse of Nobility and Gentry was fo great, that being, for Sports Sake, divided into Troops, according to their Names, in the first Troop, which confifted of Williams, there were found an hundred and ten Knights fitting at the Table of that Name, without reckoning the ordinary Gentlemen, and their Servants. It is as pleafant to diffinguish the Tables by the Names of the Guefts, as it was in the Emperor Geta, to dislinguish the several Courses of his Meat, by the first Letters of the Meats themselves, where those that began with B, were ferv'd up together, as Brawn, Beef, Bream, Bull tards and Beccaficos, and so of others. Now there is a Say ing, that it is a good thing to have a good Name, that is to fay, Credit, and a good Repute: But besides this, I da.

out

the

e of

hat,

v of

af-

and,

and

'tis vati-

felt, nels

e of 121-ility

fut

d an ame,

their

y the

Let with

Buf.

Say.

that is, it is really convenient, to have such a Name as is easy of Pronunciation, and eafy to be remembred; by Reason, that Kings, and other great Persons, do by that Means the more eafily know, and the more hardly forget us; and indeed, of our own Servants, we more frequently call and employ those, whose Names are most ready upon the Tongue. myself have feen Henry the Second, when he could not for his Heart hit of a Gentleman's Name of our Country of Gastony; and moreover was fain to call one of the Queen's Maids of Honour, by the general Name of her Family, her own being so difficult to pronounce or remember. And Socrates thinks it worthy a Father's Care, to give fine Names to his Children. 'Tis faid, that the Foundation of Nofire Dame la Grande, at Poictiers, took it's Original from hence, that a debauch'd young Fellow formerly living in that Place, having pick'd up a Whore, and at her first coming in, asking her Name, and being answer'd, that it was Mary, he felt himself so suddenly darted through with the Awe of Religion, and the Reverence to that facred Name of the bleffed Virgin, that he not only immediately put his lewd Mistress away from him, but became a reformed Man, and so continued the Remainder of his Life: And that in Consideration of this Miracle, there was erected upon the Place, where this young Man's House stood, first a Chapel dedicated to our Lady, and afterwards the Church that we now fee standing there. This auricular Reproof wrought upon the Conscience, and that right into the Soul. This that follows, infinuated itself merely by the Sense. Inhagoras being in Company with some wild young Fellows, and perceiving that, heated with the Feast, they complotted to go violate an honest House, commanded the Singing-Wench to alter her wanton Airs; and by a folemn, grave, and spondaick Musick, gently enchanted and laid asleep their Ardour. Will not Posterity * say, that our modern Reformation has been wonderfully exact, in having not only scuffled with, and overcome Errors and Vice, and fill'd the World with Devotion, Humility, Obedience, Peace,

 Z_3

and

^{*} This Paragraph feems to be foisted in, and none of Montaigne's, who was himself a Papitt.

Montaigne's Esfays.

334

and all Sorts of Virtue; but to have proceeded fo far, as to quarrel with the ancient Baptismal Names of Charles, Leavis, and Francis, to fill the World with Methyfalens, Exekiels, and Malachies, of a more spiritual Sound? A Gentleman, a Neighbour of mine, a great Admirer of Antiquity, and who was always preferring the Excellency of preceding Times, in Comparison with this present Age of ours, did not (amongst the rest) forget to magnify the lofty and magnificent Sound of the Gentlemen's Names of those Days, Don Grumedan, Quadregan, Angesilan, &c. which but to hear nam'd, he perceiv'd to be other kind of Men, than Pierre, Guillot and Michel. I am mightily pleased with Jaques Amiot, for leaving throughout a whole French Oration, the Latin Names entire, without varying and dilfecting them, to give them a French Termination, It feem'd a little harsh and rough at first; but already Custom, by the Authority of Plutarch, (whom he took for his Example) has overcome that Novelty. I have often will'd, that fuch as write Chronicle Histories in Latin, would leave our Names as they find them, and as they are, and ought to be, for in making Vaudemont, Vallemontance, and Metamorphofing Names, to make them fuit better with the Greek or Latin, we know not where we are, and with the Persons of the Men, lose the Benefit of the Story. To conclude, 'tisa feurvy Cuftom, and of very ill Confequence, which we have in our Kingdom of France, to call every Man by the Name of his Mannor, or Seigneury, and the Thing in the World that does the most Prejudice, and most confound Families and Descents. A younger Brother of a good Family, having a Mannor left him by his Father, by the Name of which he has been known and honour'd, can not handsomly leave it; ten Years after his Decease, itsalls into the Hand of a Stranger, who does the same: Do but judge whereabouts we shall be, concerning the Knowledge of these Men. We need look no farther for Examples, than our own royal Family, where every Partage creates a new Sirname, whilst in the mean Time the Original of the Family is totally loft. There is so great Liberty taken in these Mutations, that I have not in my Time feen any one advanc'd by Fortune to any extraordinary Condition, who has not presently had genealogick Titles added to him, new s to les.

A

An-

of lge

s of

len,

It

om,

ght

vie-

the

To

nce,

the

noft

ofa

, by

can-falls

but edge

new.

Fa-

hele

ad-

who

and unknown to his Father, and who has not been inoculated into fome illustrious Stem; and by good Luck, the obscurest Families are the most proper for Falsification. How many Gentlemen have we in France, who, by their own Talk, are of royal Extraction? More I think than of those that will confess they are not. Was it not a pleasant Passage of a Friend of mine? There were a great many Gentlemen affembled together, about the Dispute of one Lord of a Mannor, with another; which other had in Truth, some Pre-eminence of Titles and Alliances, above the ordinary Scheme of Gentry. Upon the Debate of this Priority of Place, every one standing up for himfelf, to make himself equal to him, alledging One one Extraction, Another another; One the near Refemblance of Name; Another of Arms; Another an old worm-eaten Patent; and the last of them, Great-Grandchild to some foreign King. When they came to fit down to Dinner, my friend, instead of taking his Place amongst them, retiring with most profound Congees, entreated the Company to excuse him, for having hitherto liv'd with them at the laucy Rate of a Companion: But being now better inform'd of their Quality, he would begin to pay them the Respect due to their Birth and Grandeur, alledging that it would ill become him to fit down among fo many Princes; and ended the Farce with a thousand Reproaches. Let us in God's Name fatisfy ourselves with what our Fathers were contented with, and with what we are: We are great enough, if we righly understand how to maintain it: Let us not dislown the Fortune and Condition of our Ancestors, but lay aside these ridiculous Pretences, that can never be wanting to any one that has the Impudence to alledge them. Arms have no more Security, than Sirnames. I bear Azure powdered with Trefoils, Or, with a Lion's Paw of the Jame armed Gules in Fesse. What Privilege to continue particularly in my House and Name? A Son-in-Law will transport it into another Family; or some paultry Purchaser will make them his first Arms; there is nothing wherein there is more Change and Confusion. But this Confideration leads me per-force into another Subject. Let us pry a little narrowly into, and, in God's Name, examine upon what Foundation we erect this Glory and Reputation, for which

which the World is turn'd topfy-turvy: Wherein do we place this Renown, that we hunt after with fo great Flagrancy, and through so many Impediments, and so much Trouble? It is, in Conclusion, Peter or William that carries it, takes it into his Possession, and whom it only concerns. O what a valiant Faculty is Hope, that in a mortal Subject, and in a Moment, makes nothing of usurping Infinity and Immensity, and of supplying her Master's Indigence at her Pleasure, with all Things he can imagine or defire! Nature has given us this Passion for a pretty Toy to play withal. And this Peter or William, what is it but a Sound, when all is done? Or three or four Dashes with a Pen, so easy to be vary'd, that I would fain know to whom is to be attributed the Glory of so many Victories, to Guef quin, to Glesquin, or to Guaquin? And yet there would be fomething of greater Moment in the Case, than in Lucian, that Sigma should ferve Tau with a Process for,

> — Non levia, aut ludicra petuntur Præmia *.

To do brave Acts, who has the noble Spirit, Slights mean Rewards, as Things below his Merit.

The Chace is there in very good earnest: The Question is, which of these Letters is to be rewarded for so many Sieges, Battles, Wounds, Imprisonments, and Services done to the Crown of France, by this famous Constable. Nicholas Demisot never concern'd himself further than the Letters of his Name, of which he has altered the whole Contexture to build up by Anagram the Count of Alsinois, whom he has celebrated with the utmost Force and Glory of his Poetry and Painting. And the Historian Suetonius could be satisfied with nothing he writ, unless it might redound to his own particular Honour, which made him cashier his Father's Sirname Leavis, to leave Tranquillus Successor to the Reputation of his Writings. Who would believe, that Captain Bayard should have no Honour, but what he de-

* Aneid. lib. 129

gives

rives from Peter Terrail; and that Antonio Escalin should suffer himself to his Face, to be robb'd of the Honour of so many Navigations and Commands at Sea and Land by Capt. Paulin, and the Baron De la Garde? These are Injuries of the Pen, common to a thousand People. How many are there in every Family of the same Name and Sirname? And how many more in feveral Families, Ages and Countries? History tells us of three of the Name of Socrates, of five Platos, of eight Aristotles, of seven Xenophons, of twenty Demetrius's, and of twenty Theodores ; and how many more she was not acquainted with, we may imagine. Who hinders my Groom from calling himself Pompey the Great? But after all, by what Virtue, what Authority, or what fecret Conveyances are there, that fixed upon my deceased Groom, or the other Pompey, who had his Head cut off in Ægypt, this glorious Renown, and these so much honoured Flourishes of the Pen, so as to be of any Advantage to them?

Id cinerem, & manes credis curare sepultos *?

Can we believe the Dead regard fuch Things?

What Sense have the two Collegues of the greatest Esteem amongst Men? Epaminondas of this glorious Verse, that has been so many Ages current in his Praise;

Confiliis nostris laus est attrita Laconum:

One Sparta by my Counsels is o'erthrown.

Or Africanus of this other?

A sole ex oriente, supra Mæotis Paludes Nemo est, qui sactis me æquiparare queat.

From early Dawn, unto the fetting Sun, No none can match the Deeds that I have done.

* Aneid. lib. 4.

Sur-

338 MONTAIGNE'S Esfays.

Survivors indeed tickle themselves with these Praises, and by them incited to Jealousy or Desire, inconsiderately, and according to their own Fancy, attribute to the Dead those Virtues themselves pretend to most: God knows how vainly slattering themselves, that they shall one Day in Turn be capable of the same Characters: However,

Romanus, Grajusque & Barbarus, Induperator Erexit; causas discriminis, atque laboris Inde habuit, tanto major samæ sitis est, quam Virtutis †.

Greek, Roman, and Barbarian Chiefs to these, Devote their Valour and Contrivances, And to the Greediness of Glory woe The Dangers and Fatigues they undergo; So much more potent is the Thirst of Fame Than that of Virtue.

ZERE ZETRA

CHAP. XLVII.

Of the Incertainty of our Judgment.

TT was well faid of the Poet,

·alle

Επέων δε πολύς νόμος ένθα η ένθα †.

There is every where Liberty of Arguing enough, and enough to be faid on both Sides: For Example;

Vince Annibal', & non seppe usar' poi Ben la vittoriosa sua ventura ‡.

* Juvenal. Sat. 10. + Homer. Had. 20. + Vetrar. Son. 83.

Hannibal

Of the Incertainty of our Judgment. 339

Hannibal conquered; but was not wife To make the best Use of his Victories.

Such as would improve this Argument, and condemn the Overfight of our Leaders, in not pushing home the Victory at Moncontour; or accuse the King of Spain of not knowing how to make his best Use of the Advantage he had against us at St. Quintin, may conclude these Oversights to proceed from a Soul already drunk with Success, or from a Courage, which being full, and over-gorged with this Beginning of good Fortune, had loft the Appetite of adding to it, having already enough to do to digest what it had taken in: He has his Arms full, and can embrace no more: Unworthy of the Benefit conferred upon him, and the Advantage she had put into his Hands: For what Utility does he reap from it, if, notwithstanding, he gives his Enemy Refpite to rally, recover his Astonishment, and to make head against him? What Hope is there, that he will dare at another Time to attack an Enemy re-united and re-composed, and armed a-new with Spite and Revenge, who did not dare to purfue him when routed, and unmanned by Fear?

Dum fortuna calet, dum conficit omnia terror *.

Whilst Fortune's in the Heat, and Terror does, More than their sharpest Swords, subdue their Foes.

But withal, what better Opportunity can he expect, than that he has lost: 'Tis not here, as in Fencing, where the most Hits gain the Prize: For so long as the Enemy is on Foot, the Game is new to begin, and that is not to be called a Victory, that puts an End to the War. In the Encounter where Casar had the worse, near to the City of Oricum, he reproached Pompey's Soldiers, that he had been lost, had their General known how to overcome; and afterwards beat him in his Turn. But why may not a Man also argue on the contrary, that it is the Effect of a precipitous and

* Lucret. 1. 7.

infatiate

infatiate Spirit, not to know how to bind and restrain it's Ardour: That it is to abuse the Favours of God, to exceed the Measure he has prescribed them: And that again, to throw a Man's felf into Danger, after a Victory obtained, is again to expose himself to the Mercy of Fortune: And that it is one of the greatest Discretions in the Rule of War, not to drive an Enemy to Despair. Sylla and Marius, in the Affociate War, having defeated the Marsians; seeing yet a Body of Reserve, that, prompted by Despair, was coming on like enraged Brutes to charge in upon them, thought it not convenient to stand their Charge. Had not Monfieur De Foix's Ardour transported him so precipitously to pursue the Remains of the Victory of Ravenna, he had not obscur'd it by his own Death. And yet the recent Memory of his Example ferved to preferve Monfieur d' Anguien from the same Missortune at the Battle of Serifoles. Tis dangerous to attack a Man you have deprived of all Means to escape, but by his Arms: For Necessity teaches violent Resolutions: Gravissimi sunt morsus irritatæ Necessitatis*: Enrag'd Necessity bites deep.

Vincitur haud gratis jugulo qui provocat hostem +.

The Foe that meets the Sword ne'er gratis dies.

This was that made Pharax with-hold the King of Lacedamon, who had won a Battle of the Mantineans, from going to charge a thousand Argians, who were escaped in an entire Body from the Defeat; but rather let them steal off at Liberty, that he might not encounter Valour whetted and enraged by Mischance; Clodomire, King of Aquitaine, after his Victory pursuing Gondemar, King of Burgundy, beaten, and making off as fast as he could for Safety, compelled him to face about, and make head, wherein his Obstinacy deprived him of the Fruit of his Conquest; for he there lost his Life.

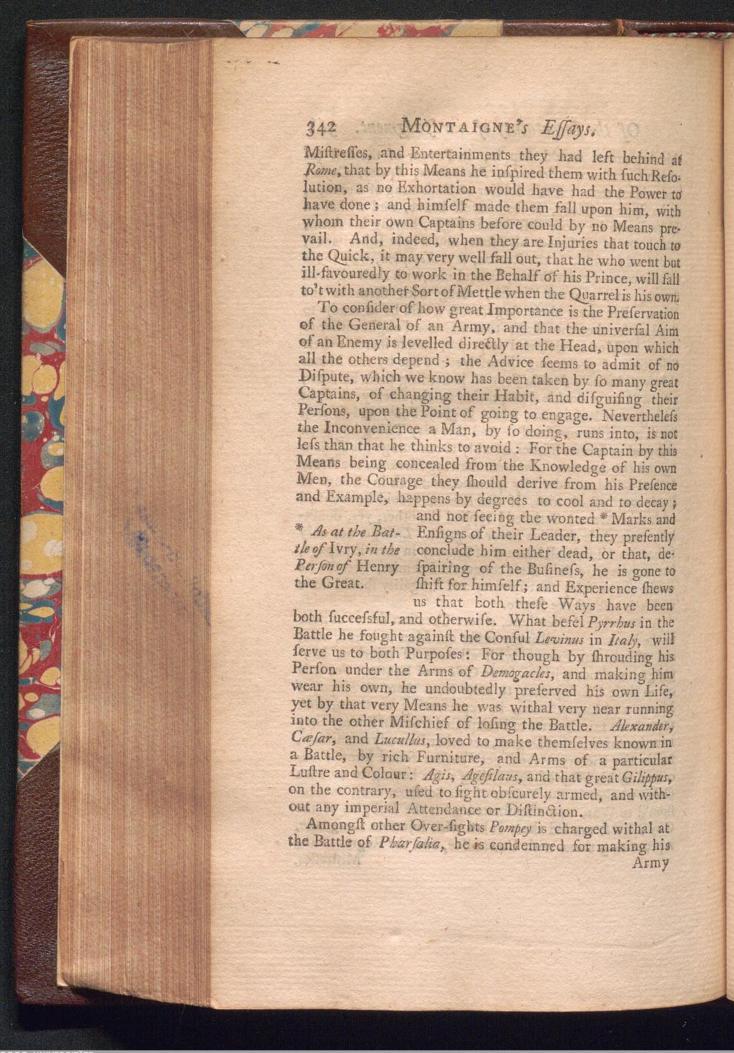

In like Manner, if a Man were to chuse, whether he would have his Soldiers Ainquant, and richly accouter'd with Damask Arms, or armed only for necessary Defence;

^{*} Port. Lat. in Decla. + Luc. lib. 4. Mayes Luc. this

Of the Incertainty of our Judgment. 341

this Argument would step in, in Favour of the first (of which Opinion was Sertorius, Philopæmen, Brutus, Cæfar, and others) that it is to a Soldier an Enflaming of Courage, and a Spur to Glory, to see himself brave, and withal an Imitation to be more obstinate in Fight, having his Arms, which are in a Manner his Estate, and whole Inheritance, to defend; which is the Reason, says Xenophon, why those of Asia carried their Wives, Concubines, with their choicest Jewels, and greatest Wealth, along with them to the Wars. But then these Arguments would be as ready to stand up for the other Side; that a General ought rather to render his Men careless and desperate, than to increase their Solicitude of preserving themselves: That by this Means they will be in a double Fear of hazarding their Persons; as it will be a double Temptation to the Enemy to fight with greater Refolution, where so great Booty and so rich Spoils are to be obtained: And this very Thing has been observed in former Times, notably to encourage the Romans against the Samnites. Antiochus shewing Hannibal the Army he had raifed, wonderfully splendid, and rich in all Sorts of Equipage, asked him, If the Romans would be satisfied with that Army? Satisfied! replied the other, yes, doubtless, were their Avarice never so great. Lycurgus not only forbad his Soldiers all Manner of Bravery in their Equipage, but moreover to strip their conquer'd Enemies, because he would (as he faid) that Poverty and Frugality should shine with the rest of the Battle.

At Sieges and elsewhere, where Occasion draws us near to the Enemy, we willingly suffer our Men to brave, rate, and affront the Enemy with all Sorts of injurious Language; and not without some Colour of Reason: For it is of no little Consequence to take from them all Hopes of Mercy and Composition, in representing to them, that there is no fair Quarter to be expected from an Enemy they have incensed to that Degree, nor other Remedy remaining, but in the Victory. And yet Vitellius found himself deceived in his Way of Proceeding; for having to do with Otho, weaker in the Valour of his Soldiers, long unaccustom'd to War, and esseminated with the Delights of the City; he so nettled them at last with injurious Language, reproaching them with Cowardice, and the Regret of the Mistresses,

Of the Incertainty of our Judgment. Army fland still to receive the Enemies Charge; by Reason that (I shall here steal Platarch's own Words, that are better than mine) he, by so doing, deprived himself of the violent Impression the Motion of running adds to the first Shock of Arms, and hindred the Justle of the Combatants (who were wont to give great Impetuofity and Fury to the first Encounter; especially when they came to rush in with their utmost Vigour, their Courages increasing by the Shouts and the Career) thereby rendering his Soldiers Animosity and Ardour, as a Man may say, more reserved and cold. This is what Plutarch fays: But if Cafar had come by the worse, why might it not as well have been urged by another, That, on the contrary, the strongest and most steady Posture of Fighting, is that wherein a Man stands planted firm without Motion; and that they, who make a Halt upon their March, closing up, and referving their Force within themselves for the Push of the Business, have a great Advantage against those who are disordered, and who have already spent half their Breath in running on precipitously to the Charge: Besides, that an Army being a Body made up of fo many individual Members, it is impossible for it to move in this Fury with so exact a Motion as no to break the Order of Battle, and that the best of the Footare engaged before their Fellows can come in to relieve them In that unnatural Battle betwixt the two Persian Brothers, the Lacedemonian Clearchus, who commanded the Greeks of Cyrus's Party, led them on loftly, and without Precipitation, to the Charge; but coming within fifty Paces, hurry'd them on full Speed, hoping in fo short a Career, both to look to their Order, to husband their Breath, and, at the same Time, to give an Advantage of Violence and Impression both to their Persons and their missive Arms: Others have regulated this Question in charging thus; if your Enemy come running upon you, frand firm to receive him; if he stand to receive you, run full drive upon him. In the Expedition of the Emperor Charles the Fifth into Provence, King Francis was put to chuse either to go meet him in Italy, or to expect him in his own Dominions; wherein, though he very well confidered of how great Advantage it was to preferve his own Territories entire, and clear from the Troubles and Inconveniencies of the War, to Montaigne's Estays.

344

the End, that being unexhausted of her Stores, it might continually fupply Men and Money at Need, that the Necessity of War requires at every Turn to spoil, and lay waste the Country before them, which cannot very well be done upon one's own; to which may be added, that the Country People do not so easily digest such a Havock by those of their own Party, as from an Enemy, so that Seditions and Commotions might by fuch Means be kindled amongst us; that the Licence of Pillage and Plunder (which are not to be tolerated at home) is a great Ease and Refreshment against the Fatigues and Sufferings of War; and that he who has no other Prospect of Gain than his bare Pay, will hardly be kept from running Home, being but two Steps from his Wife and his own House; that he who lays the Cloth, is ever at the Charge of the Feast: That there is more Alacrity in Affaulting than Defending; and that the Loss of a Battle in our own Bowels gives so violent a Shock, as to endanger the disjointing of the whole Body, there being no Passion so contagious as that of Fear, that is so easily believed, or that so suddenly diffuses it's Poison; and that the Cities that should hear the Rattle of this Tempest, that should take in their Captains and Soldiers, yet trembling and out of Breath, would be in Danger, in this Heat and Hurry, to precipitate themselves upon some untoward Refolution: Notwithstanding all this, so it was, that he chose to recal the Forces he had beyond the Mountains, and to fuffer the Enemy to come to him. For he might, on the other Side, imagine, that being at Home, and amongst his Friends, he could not fail of Plenty of all Manner of Conveniencies; the Rivers and Passes he had at his Devotion, would bring him in both Provisions and Money in all Security, and without the Trouble of Convoy; that he should find his Subjects by so much the more affectionate to him, by how much their Danger was more near and preffing; that having fo many Cities and Stops to secure him, it would be in his Power to give the Law of Battle at his own Opportunity and best Advantage; and if it pleased him to delay the Time, that, under Covert, and at his own Ease, he might see his Enemy founder, and defeat himself with the .fficulties he was certain to encounter, being engaged an Enemy's Country, where before, behind, behind, and on every Side, War would be upon him; no Means to refresh himself, or to enlarge his Quarters, should Diseases infest them, or to lodge his wounded Men in Safety: No Money, no Victuals, but all at the Point of the Lance; no Leifure to repose and take Breath; no Knowledge of the Ways or Country, to secure him from Ambushes and Surprizes: And in Case of losing a Battle, no possible Means of faving the Remains. Neither is there Want of Example in both these Cases. Scipio thought it much better to go and attack his Enemy's Territories in Africk, than to flay at home to defend his own, and fight him in Italy; and it succeeded well with him: But, on the contrary, Hannibal, in the same War, ruin'd himself, by abandoning the Conquest of a strange Country, to go defend his own. The Athenians having left the Enemy in their own Dominions, to go over into Sicily, were not favoured by Fortune in their Defign; but Agathocles, King of Syracuse, found her favourable to him, when he went over into Africk, and left the War at home. By which Examples, and divers others, we are wont to conclude, and with some Reason, that Events, especially in War, do for the most Part depend upon Fortune, who will not be govern'd by, nor fubmit unto human Prudence, according to the Poet, Et male consultis pretium est, prudentia fallax, Nec fortuna probat causas, sequiturque merentes: Sed vaga per cunctos nullo discrimine fertur. Scilicet est aliud quod nos cogatque, regatque Majus, & in proprias ducat mortalia leges*.

Of the Incertainty of our Judgment. 345

Prudence deceitful and uncertain is,
Ill Counsels sometimes hit, where good Ones miss;
Nor yet does Fortune the best Cause approve,
But wildly does, without Distinction, rove.
So that some greater and more constant Cause,
Rules and subjects us to more powerful Laws:

But if Things hit right, it should seem that our Counsels and Deliberations depend as much upon Fortune, as any

* Manil. Aftron. lib. 4.
Vol. I, A a

Thing

Thing else we do, and that she engages our very Reason and Arguments in her Uncertainty and Consussion. We argue rashly and adventurously, says Timaus in Plato, by Reason that, as well as ourselves, our Discourses have great Participation with the Temerity of Chance.

HARROW TO THE HARRING TO THE HARROW THE HARR

CHAP. XLVIII.

Of Horses dressed to the Manage, called Deftriers.

AM now become a Grammarian; I, who never learned any Language but by rote, and who do not yet know Adjective, Conjunctive, or Ablative, think I have read, that the Romans had a Sort of Horses by them called Funales, or Dextrarios, which were either Led-Horses, or Horses laid in at feveral Stages to be taken fresh upon Occasion; and thence it is, that we call our Horses of Service, Destriers: And our Romances commonly use the Phrase of Destrer for Accompagner, to accompany. They also called these Horses Defultorios Equos, which were taught to run full Speed Side by Side, without Bridle or Saddle, fo as that the Roman Gentlemen armed at all Pieces, would shift and throw themfelves from the one to the other. The Numidian Men at Arms had always a Led-Horse in one Hand, besides that they rode upon, to change in the Heat of Battle: Quibus, Defultorum in modum, binos trabentibus equos, inter acerrimam sæpe pugnam in recentam equum ex fesso armatis, transultare, mos erat. Tanta velocitas ipsis, tamque docile equorum genus*. Whose Custom it was, leading along two Horses, after the Manner of the Defultorum, armed as they were, in the Heat of Fight, to vault from a tired Horse to a fresh one; so active were the Men, and the Horses so docile. There are many Horses trained up to help their Riders, so as to run upon any one that appears with a drawn Sword, to fall

* Liv. l. 23.

both

both with Mouth and Heels upon any that front or oppose them: But it oft falls out, that they do more Harm to their Friends than their Enemies, confidering that you cannot loofe them from their Hold, to reduce them again into Order, when they are once engaged and grappled; by which Means you remain at the Mercy of their senseless Quarrel. It happened very ill to Artibius, General of the Persian Army, fighting Man to Man with Onefilus, King of Salamis, to be mounted upon a Horse taught after this Manner, it being the Occasion of his Death; the 'Squire of Onefilus cleaving him down with a Scythe betwixt the Shoulders, as the Horse was reared up upon his Master. And what the Italians report, That in the Battle of Fornoua, King Charles's Horse, with Kicks and Plunges, disengag'd his Master from the Enemy that pressed upon him, without which he had been flain, founds odly, and he ran a very great Hazard, and came strangely off, if it be true. The Mamalukes made their Boast, that they had the most ready Horses of any Cavalry in the World; that by Nature and Custom they were taught to know and distinguish the Enemy they were to fall foul upon with Mouth and Heels. according to a Word or Sign given: As also to gather up with their Teeth, Darts and Lances scattered upon the field, and present them to their Riders, as they should have Occasion to use them. 'Tis said both of Casar and Pompey, that, amongst other excellent Qualities they were Mafters of, they were both excellent Horse-Men, and particularly of Cæsar, that in his Youth, being mounted on the bare Back, without Saddle or Bridle, he could make him run, stop, and turn, and perform all his Airs, with his Hands behind him. As Nature designed to make of his Person, and of Alexander, two Miracles of Military Art, lo we may fay, she had done her utmost to arm them after an extraordinary Manner: For every one knows, that Alexander's Horse, Bucephalus, had a Head inclining to the Shape of a Bull, that he would fuffer himself to be mounted and governed by none but his Master, and that he was so honoured after his Death, as to have a City erected to his Name. Cæsar had also another, that had Fore-feet like the Hands of a Man, his Hoof being divided in the Form of Fingers, and likewise was not to be ridden by any but A 2 2

Cafar himself; who, after his Death, dedicated his Statue to the Goddess Venus. I do not willingly alight when I am once on Horse-back; for it is the Place where, whether well or fick, I find myself most at Ease. Plato recommends it for Health; and also Pliny says, it is good for the Stomach and the Joints. We read in Xenophon, a Law, forbidding any one, who was Master of a Horse, to travel on Foot. Trogus and Justinus say, That the Parthians were wont to perform all Offices and Ceremonies, not only in War, but also all Affairs, whether publick or private, make Bargains, confer, entertain, take the Air, and all on Horse-back; and that the greatest Distinction betwixt Freemen and Slaves amongst them, was, that the one rode on Horse-back, and the other went on Foot: An Institution of which King Cyrus was the Founder. There are feveral Examples in the Roman History (and Suetonius more particularly observes it in Cæsar) of Captains, who, in pressing Occafions, commanded their Cavalry to alight, both by that Means to take from them all Hopes of Flight, as also for the Advantage they hoped for in this Sort of Flight. Quo haud dubie superat Romanus: Wherein the Romans did, questionless, excel: So fays Livy*; however, the first Thing they did to prevent the Mutinies and Infurrections of Nations of late Conquest, was to take from them their Arms and Horses: And therefore it is that we so often meet in Cæsar; Arma proferri, jumenta produci, obsides dari jubet †: He commanded the Arms to be produced, the Horses brought out, and Hostages to be given. The Grand Seignior, to this Day, suffers not a Christian or a Few to keep a Horle of his own throughout his Empire. Our Ancestors, at the Time they had War with the English, in all their greatest Engagements and pitch'd Battles, fought for the most Part on Foot, that they might have nothing but their own Force, Courage, and Constancy to trust to, in a Quarrel of fo great Concern as Life and Honour. You stake (whatever Chrysantes in Xenophon fays to the contrary) your Valour and your Fortune, upon that of your Horse; his Wound or Death brings your Person into the same Danger;

+ Cæfar's Com.

his

and to fo or of the he CO with his Fear or Fury shall make you be reputed rash or cowardly; if he have an ill Mouth, or will not answer to the Spur, your Honour must answer it: And therefore I do not think it strange, that those Battles I spoke of before were more firm and surious than those that are sought on Horse-back.

^{*} Liv. 1. 3.

--- Cedebant pariter, pariterque ruebant Victores victique, neque his fuga nota, neque illis*.

They charg'd together, and did fo retreat The Victors, and the vanquished; nor yet The Knack of running was unto the one, Or to the other of the Parties known.

Their Battles were much better disputed: Now-a-days there are nothing but Routs; Primus clamor, atque impetus rem decernit: The first Shout, or the first Charge, puts an End to the Business: And the Arms we choose to make Use of in so great a Hazard, should be as much as possible at our own Command: Wherefore I should advise to choose them of the shortest Sort, and such of which we are able to give the best Account. A Man may repose more Confidence in a Sword he holds in his Hand, than in a Bullet he discharges out of a Pistol, wherein there must be a Concurrence of several Executions, to make it perform it's Office, the Powder, the Stone, and the Wheel, if any of which fail, it at least endangers your Fortune: A Man strikes much surer than the Air directs him.

Et quo ferre velint permittere vulnera ventis, Ensis habet vires, & gens quæcunque virorum est Bella gerit gladiis †.

They shoot, and where it lists the Wind bostows
Their Wounds; but Fight of Sword does Strength require,
All manly Nations the Sword-Fight desire ‡.

* Virg. Æneid. lib. 10. † Lucan. l. 8. † Mr. May's Trans. A a 3

But

Montaigne's Esfays.

350

But of that Weapon I shall speak more fully, when I come to compare the Arms of the Ancients with those of modern Use, though by the Way, the Astonishment of the Ear abated, which every one grows familiar with in a little Time. I look upon it as a Weapon of very little Execution, and hope we shall one Day lay it aside. That missile Weapon which the Italians formerly made Use of both with Fire and without, was much more terrible: They called a certain Kind of Javelin armed at the Point with an Iron three Foot long, that it might pierce through and through an armed Man, Phalarica, which they fometimes in Fieldfervice darted by Hand: Sometimes from feveral Sorts of Engines for the Defence of beleagured Places: The Shatt whereof being rolled round with Flax, Wax, Rolin, Oil, and other combustible Matter, took Fire in it's Flight, and lighting upon the Body of a Man, or his Target, took away all the Use of Arms and Limbs. And yet coming to close fight, I should think they should also endamage the Assailant, and that the Camp being as it were planted with these Flaming Truncheons, should produce a common Inconvenience to the whole Crowd.

— Magnum stridens contorta Phalarica venit, Fulminis acta modo — *.

The Comet like Phalarica does fly, With a huge Noise like Lightning through the Sky.

They had moreover other Devices which Custom made them perfect in (which will feem incredible to us who have not feen them) by which they supply'd the Effects of our Powder and Shot. They darted their Piles with so great Violence, as oft-times transfixed two Targets, and two armed Men at once, and pinned them together. Neither was the Effect of their Slings less certain of Execution, or of shorter Carriage: Saxis globosts funda, mare apertum incessantes; coronas modici circuli magno ex intervallo loci assenti fueti trajicere; non capita modo hossium vulnerabant, sed quem

* Virg. Eneid. 9.

Locum

locum destinassent *: Culling round Stones from the Shore for their Slings: And with them practifing at a great Distance to throw through a Circle of very small Circumference, they would not only wound an Enemy in the Head, but hit any other Part at Pleasure. Their Pieces of Battery had not only the Execution, but the Thunder of our Cannon also: Ad ictus mænium cum terribili sonitu editos, pavor & trepidatio capit +: At the Battery of the Walls, which is performed with a dreadful Noise, the Defendants began to fear and tremble within. The Gauls, our Kinsmen in Asia, abominated these treacherous missile Arms, it being their Use to fight with greater Bravery Hand to Hand. Non tam patentibus plagis moventur, ubi latior, quam altior plaga est, etiam gloriosius se pugnare putant; iidem quum aculeus sagittæ aut glandis abditæ introrsus tenui vulnere in speciem urit; tum in rabiem & pudorem tam parva perire pestes versi, prosternunt corpora humi 1: They are not so much concerned at large Wounds; when a Wound is wider than deep, they think they have fought with greater Glory: But when they find themselves tormented within, under the Aspect of a slight Wound, with the Point of a Dart, or some concealed glandulous Body, then transported with Fury and Shame, to perish by so small and contemptible an Officer of Death, they fall to the Ground; an Expression of fomething very like a Musket-Shot. The ten thousand Greeks in their long and famous Retreat, met with a Nation who very much galled them with great and ftrong Bows, carrying Arrows so long, that taking them up one might return them back like a Dart, and with them pierce a Buckler, and an armed Man through and through. The Engines of Dyonistus's Invention at Syracuse, to shoot vast massy Darts, and Stones of a prodigious Greatness with to great Impetuolity, and at fo great a Distance, came very near to our modern Inventions. But in this Discourse of Horses and Horsemanship, we are not to forget the pleasant Posture of one Maistre Pierre Pol, a Doctor of Divinity, upon his Mule, whom Menstrelet reports always to have rid afide through the Streets of Paris like a Woman. He fays also elsewhere, that the Gascons had terrible Horses, that would wheel, and make the Pirouette in their full Speed, which the French, Piccards, Dutch, and Brabanters looked upon as a Miracle, having never feen the like before; which are his very Words. Cafar speaking of the Swedes, in the Charges they make on Horfe-back, fays he, they often throw themselves off to fight on Foot, having taught their Horses not to stir in the mean Time from the Place, to which they prefently run again upon Occasion; and according to their Custom nothing is so unmanly and so base as to use Saddles or Pads, and they despise such as make Use of those Conveniencies: Infomuch that being but a very few in Number, they fear not to attack a great many. That which I have formerly wondered at, to fee a Horse made to perform all his Airs with a Switch only, and the Reins upon his Neck, was common with the Massilians, who rid their Horses without Saddle or Bridle.

> Et gens quæ nudo residens Massilia dorso, Ora levi slectit, frænorum nescia virga, Et Numidæ infræni cingunt **.

Massilians who on the bare Backs do ride, And with a Switch, not knowing Bridle's Guide 'The manag'd Steed, and fierce Numidians too That use no Rein, begirt us round.

Equi fine frænis deformis ipse cursus, ridiga cervice, & extento capite currentium †: The Career of a Horse without a Bridle must needs be ungrateful, his Neck being extended sliff, and his Nose thrust out. King Alphonso, he who sirst instituted the Order des Chevaliers de la Bande, or de l'Escherpe in Spain, amongst other Rules of the Order gave them this, That they should never ride Mule or Mulet, upon Penalty of a Mark of Silver; which I had lately out of Guevara's Letters, which whoever gave them the Title of golden Epistles, had another Kind of Opinion of them

* Aneid. 1. 4.

+ Liv. 1.35.

than

Co

tle

th

P

fo

th

th

qu

VC

OI

pi

of ne

h

Sott mtl Sac to c

than I have, and perhaps faw more in them than I do. The Courtier fays, that till his Time it was a Difgrace to a Gentleman to ride one of those Creatures: But the Abyffines on the contrary, as they are nearer advanc'd to the Person of Prestor John, do affect to be mounted upon large Mules, for the greater Dignity and Grandeur. Xenophon tells us, that the Affyrians were fain to keep their Horses fetter'd in the Stable, they were so fierce and vicious: And that it required fo much Time to loofe and harness them, that to avoid any Disorder this tedious Preparation might bring upon them, in case of Surprise, they never sat down in their Camp, till it was first well fortified with Ditches and Rampiers. His Cyrus, who was fo great a Master in all manner of Horse Service, kept his Horses to their Ordinary, and never fuffer'd them to have any Thing to eat till first they had earn'd it by the Sweat of some kind of Exercise. The Scythians, when in the Field, and in Scarcity of Provisions, 18'd to let their Horses Blood, which they drank and suftain'd themselves by that Diet.

Venit & epoto Sarmata pastus equo*.

The Scythian also comes without Remorfe, Having before quaft up his bleeding Horse.

Those of Crotta being besieg'd by Metellus, were in so great Necessity for Drink, that they were fain to quench their Thirst with their Horses Urine: And to shew how much better cheap, the Turkish Armies support, themselves than our European Forces, 'tis said, that besides that the Soldiers drink nothing but Water and eat nothing but Rice and Salt Flesh pulveriz'd (of which every one may easily carry about with him a Month's Provision) they know how to seed upon the Blood of their Horses, as well as the Muscovite and Tartar, and salt it for their Use. These new discover'd People of the Indies, when the Spaniards sirst landed amongst them, had so great an Opinion both of the Men and Horses, that they look'd upon the sirst as Gods,

* Mart. 1. 2.

and

MONTAIGNE'S Esfays.

354

and the other Animals ennobled above their Nature. Infomuch that after they were fubdu'd, coming to fue for Peace, and to bring them Gold and Provisions, they fail'd not to present the same to the Horses, with the same kind of Harangue to them, which they had made to the other; interpreting their Neighing for a Language of Truce and Friendship. In these nearer Indies, to ride upon an Elephant was the first Place of Honour, the second to ride in a Coach with four Horses, the third to ride upon a Camel, and the last to be carried, or drawn by one Horse only, Some one of our late Writers tells us, that he has been in a Country in those Parts, where they ride upon Oxen with Pads, Stirrups, and Bridles, and very much at their Eafe. Quintus Fabius Maximus Rutilianus, in a Battle with the Samnites, feeing his Cavalry, after three or four Charges, had fail'd of breaking into the Enemies main Body, took this Courfe to make them unbridle all their Horses; so that having nothing to check their Career, they might through Weapons and Men, open the Way for his Foot, who by that Means gave them a bloody Defeat. The same Command was given by Quintus Fukvius Flaccus against the Celtiberians: Id cum majore vi equorum facietis, fi effrænatos in hostes equos immittatis; quod sæpe Romanos equites cum laude fecisse memoriæ proditum est. Detractisque frænis bis ultro citroque cum magna strage hostium, infractis omnibus hastis, transcurrerunt *. You will do your Business with greater Advantage of your Horses Strength, if you spur them unbridled upon the Enemy, as it is recorded the Roman Horse to their great Glory have often done. And their Bits being pull'd off without breaking a Launce, to have charg'd through and through, with great Slaughter of the Enemy: The Duke of Muscovy was anciently oblig'd to pay this Reverence to the Tartars, that when they fent any Embassy to him, he went out to meet the Embassadors on Foot, and presented them with a Mazer, or Goblet of Mare's Milk (a Beverage of greatest Esteem among them) and fo great, that if in drinking, a Drop fell by Chance upon the Horse's Main, they thought themselves indispen-

* Liv. l. 40.

[fably

fably bound to lick it off with their Tongue: The Army that Bajazet had fent into Russia, was overwhelm'd with fo dreadful a Tempest of Snow, that to shelter, and preserve themselves from starving, many ript up, and embowell'd their Horses, to creep into their Bellies, and enjoy the Benefit of that vital Heat. Bajazet, after that furious Battle wherein he was overthrown by Tamerlane, was in a hopeful Way of securing his own Person by the Fleetness of an Arabian Mare he had under him, had he not been constrain'd to let her drink her Fill at the Ford of a River in his Way, which render'd her fo heavy and indispos'd, that he was afterwards eafily overtaken by those that purfu'd him: They fay indeed that to let a Horse stale takes him off his Mettle, but I should rather have thought that drinking would have refresh'd her, and reviv'd her Spirits: Crafus marching his Army through certain Furzs, near Sardis, met with an infinite Number of Serpents, which the Horses devoured with great Appetite, and which Herodotus fays was a Prodigy of ominous Portent to his Affairs. We call a Horse Cheval entier, that has his Main, Ears, and other Parts entire, and no other will pass Muster. The Lacedæmonians having defeated the Athenians in Sicily, returning triumphant from the Victory into the City of Syracusa, amongst other Insolencies, caus'd all the Horses they had taken to be fhorn, and led in Triumph. Alexander fought with a Nation call'd Daæ; a People whose Difcipline it was to march two and two together, arm'd on Horse-back to the War, and being in Fight one always alighted, and so they fought one while on Horse-back and another on Foot, one after another by Turns. I do not think that for graceful Riding, any Nation in the World excels the French; though a good Horseman, according to our Way of speaking, seems rather to respect the Courage of the Man than his Horsemanship and Address in riding, Of all that ever I faw the most knowing in that Art, that had the best Seat, and the best Method in breaking Horses, was Monsieur de Carnevalet, who served our King Henry the Second: I have seen a Man ride with both his Feet upon the Saddle, take off the Saddle, and at his Return take it up again, refit, and remount it, riding all the while full Speed: Having gallop'd over a Bonnet, make at it very good Shots, backward with his Bow, take up any thing from the Ground, fetting one Foot down, and the other in the Stirrup; with twenty other Apes-tricks, which he got his living by. There has been feen, in my Time, at Constantinople, two Men upon an Horse, who in the Height of his Speed would throw themselves off, and into the Saddle again by Turn, and one who bridled and faddled his Horse with nothing but his Teeth. Another who betwixt two Horses, one Foot upon one Saddle, and another upon the other, carrying another upon his Shoulders; would ride full Career, the other standing bolt upright upon him, making very good Shots with his Bow. Several who would ride full Speed with their Heels upwards, and their Hands upon the Saddle betwixt feveral Scymiters, with the Points upward fix'd in the Harness. When I was a Boy, the Prince of Salmona, riding a rough Horse at Naples to all his Airs, held Reals under his Knees and Toes; as if they had been nail'd there, to shew the Firmnefs of his Seat.

MONTAIGNE'S Esfays.

350

SUPPLIED SUPPLIE

CHAP. XLIX. Of Ancient Customs.

Should willingly pardon our People for admitting no other Pattern, or Rule of Perfection, than their own peculiar Manners, and Customs. It being a commonVice, not of the Vulgar only, but almost of all Men, to walk in the beaten Road their Ancestors have trod before them: I am content when they see Fabricius or Lælius, that they look upon their Countenance and Behaviour as barbarous, seeing they are neither clothed nor fashion'd according to our Mode. But I find Fault with their Singularity, when it arrives to that Degree of Indiscretion, as to suffer themselves to be so impos'd upon by Authority of the present Custom, as every Month to alter their Opinion, if Custom so require, and that they should so vary their Judgment in their own particular Concern: When they wore the Belly-pieces of their Doublets up as high as their Breafts, they stiffly maintain'd that they were in their proper Place: Some Years after they were flipt down between their Thighs, and then they could laugh at the former Fashion as uneasy and intolerable. The Fashion now in Use makes them absolutely condemn the other two, with fo great Indignation, and so universal Contempt, that a Man would think, there was a certain kind of Madness crept in amongst them, that infatuates their Understandings, to this strange Degree. Now feeing that our Change of Fashions is so prompt and fudden, that the Inventions of all the Taylors in the World cannot furnish out new Whim-whams enough to feed our Vanity withal; there will often be a Necessity, that the despised ones must again come in Vogue, and even those immediately after fall into the fame Contempt; and that the same Judgment must, in the Space of fifteen or twenty Years, take up not only different, but contrary Opinions, with an incredible Lightness and Inconstancy: There is not any of us fo cautious and discreet, that suffers not himself to be gull'd with this Contradiction, and both in external and internal Sight to be insensibly blinded. I will here muster up some old Customs, that I have in Memory, fome of them the same with ours, the other different, to the End, that bearing in Mind this continual Variation of human Things, we may have our Judgments clearer, and more firmly fettled: The thing in use amongst us of fighting with Rapier and Cloak, was in Practice amongst the Romans also, Sinistris sagos involvant, gladiosque distringunt *. They wrapp'd their Cloaks upon the Left Arm, and handled the Sword with the Right, fays Cafar; And I observe an old vicious Custom of our Nation, which continues yet amongst us, which is to stop Passengers we meet upon the Road, to compel them to give an Account who they are; and to take it for an Injury, and just Cause of Quarrel, if they refuse to do it: At the Bath, which the Ancients made Use of every Day before they went to Dinner, and as frequently as we wash our Hands, they at first only bath'd their Arms and Legs, but afterwards,

and

^{*} Cæsar de bello civili, lib. 1.

and by a Custom that has continued for many Ages in most Nations of the World, they bath'd stark naked in mix'd and perfum'd Water: The most delicate and affected, perfum'd themselves all over three or four Times a Day. They often caus'd their Hair to be pincht off; as the Women of France have some Time since, taken up a Custom to do their Foreheads.

Quod pectus, quod crura tibi, quod brachia vellis*.

How dost thou twitch thy Breast, thy Arms and Thighs.

Though they had Ointments proper for that Purpole.

Pfilotro nitet, aut arida latet abdita creta §.

This in Wild-vine shines, or else doth calk, Her Rank pores up in a dry Crust of Chalk.

They delighted to lye foft, and pretended it for a great Testimony of Hardiness, to lye upon a Matrass. They did eat lying upon Beds, much after the Manner of the Turks in this Age.

Inde thoro pater Aneas fic orfus ab alto +.

Then thus Æneas from his Bed of State, Begun Troy's woful Story to relate.

And 'tis faid of the younger Cato, that after the Battle of Pharfalia, being entered into a melancholick Disposition, at the ill Posture of the publick Affairs he took his Repose always sitting, assuming a strict and severe Course of Life. It was also their Custom to kiss the Hands of great Persons; the more and better to honour and cares them: And meeting with their Equals, they always kiss'd in Salutation, as do the Venetians.

§ Id. lib. 6. Ept. 93.

Grata-

la

an

re m

as af

if is

W.

to

pl W do

^{*} Mart. lib. 2. Epig. 62. † Æneid. l. 2.

Gratatusque darem cum dulcibu: oscula verbis *

And kindest Words I would with Kisses mix.

In petitioning, or faluting any great Man, they us'd to lay their Hands upon his Knees. Fasicles, the Philosopher and Brother of Crates, instead of laying his Hand upon the Knee, laid it upon his private Parts, and being rudely repuls'd by him to whom he made that indecent Compliment; What, faid he, is not that Part your own as well as the other? They us'd to eat their Fruits as we do after Dinner. They wiped their Arses (let the Ladies, if they please, mince it smaller) with a Spunge; which is the Reason that Spongia is a smutty Word in Latin; which Spunge was also fastened to the End of a Stick, as appears by the Story of him, who, as he was led along to be thrown to the wild Beafts in the Sight of the People, asking Leave to do his Business, and having no other Ways to dispatch himself, forc'd the Spunge and Stick down his own Throat and choaked himself. They us'd to terge after Coition with perfum'd Wool.

At tibi nil faciam, sed lota mentula lana +.

They used in the Streets of Rome to place certain Vessels and little Tubs for Passengers to piss in.

Pueri sæpe lacum propter, se ac dolia curta, Somno devincti credunt, extollere vestem §.

Boys dream of piffing in the Tub and Lake, And find themselves bepist when they awake.

They used to collation betwixt Meals, and had in Summer Cellars of Snow to cool their Wine; and some there were ^{*} Ovid de pont. lib. 4. Eleg. 9. † Mart. lib. 11. Epist. 50. § Lucret. 1. 4. who MONTAIGNE'S Esfays.

360

who made Use of Snow in Winter, not thinking their Wine cool enough at that cold Season of the Year. The Men of Quality had their Cup-bearers and Carvers, and their Bussions to make them Sport: They had their Meat served up in Winter upon a Sort of Chasing-Dishes; which were set upon the Table, and had portable Kitchens (of which I myself have seen some) wherein all their service was carried after them.

Has vobis epulas babete lauti. Nos offendimus ambulante Cæna *.

Those Feasts, by you indeed, are highly priz'd, At walking Suppers we are scandaliz'd.

In Summer they had a Contrivance to bring fresh and clear Rills through their lower Rooms, wherein were great Store of living Fish, which the Guests took out with their own Hands to be dress'd; every Man according to his own Liking. Fish has ever had this Pre-eminence, and keeps it still, that the great ones all pretend to be Cooks in their Fayour; and indeed, the Taste is more delicate than that of Flesh, at least to me. But in all Sorts of Magnificence, Debauchery, and voluptuous Inventions of Effeminacy and Expence, we do, in Truth, all we can to parallel them; for our Wills are as corrupt as theirs: But we want Power to reach them; and our Force is more able to reach them in their vicious, than in their virtuous Qualities; for both the one and the other proceed from a Vigour of Soul, which was without Comparison greater in them than in us: And Souls by how much the weaker they are, by fo much have they less Power to do, very well, or very ill: The highest Place of Honour amongst them was the Middle; the Name going before, and that following after, either in Writing or Speaking, had no Signification of Grandeur, as is evident by their Writings; they will fooner fay Oppius and Cæsar, than Cæsar and Oppius, and me and thee, than thee and me, which is the Reafon that made me formerly * Mart. l. 7. Epig. 47.

take

take Notice in the Life of Flaminius, in our French Plutarch, of one Passage, where it seems as if the Authors speaking of the Jealousy of Honour, betwixt the Ætolians and Romans, about the winning of a Battle they had with their joint Forces obtain'd, made it of some Importance, that in the Greek Songs they had put the Ætolians before the Romans: If there be no Amphibology, or double Dealing in the Words of the French Translation; an Instance of which I present you out of Plutarch, though Monsieur de Montaigne did not think it worth repeating.

Here, friendly Passenger, we buried lye,
Without Friends, Tears, or Fun'ral Obsequy,
Full thirty thousand Men in Battle slain
By the Ætolians, on Thessalian Plain;
And Latines, whom Flaminius led on,
And brought from Italy to Macedon.
With his fierce Valour, when faint Philip fled
With greater Speed to save his tim'rous Head,
Than Hart or Hind, when Dogs upon the Trace,
Through Woods pursue them with a full Cry Chace*.

The Ladies in their Baths made no Scruple of admitting Men amongst them, and moreover made Use of their Serving-Men to rub and anoint them:

Inguina succinctus nigra tibi servus alluta Stat, quoties calidis nuda soveris aquis §. Soot your

They all powdered themselves with a certain Powder, to moderate their Sweats. The ancient Gauls, says Sidonius Apollinaris, wore their Hair long before, and the hinder Part of the Head cut short, a Fashion that begins to be reviv'd in this vicious and esseminate Age. The Romans

ıd

^{*} Plut. vit. Tit. Quint. Flaminius. § Mart. lib. Epig. 34. Vol. I. B b ufed used to pay the Watermen their Fare at their first stepping into the Boat, which we never do 'till after landing.

362 Montaigne's Essays.

Dum as exigitur, dum mula ligatur, Tota abit bora *.

Whilst the Fare's paying, and the Mule is ty'd, A whole Hour's Time, at least, away doth slide.

The Women used to lye on that Side the Bed next the Wall; And for that Reason they call'd Cæsar, Spondam Regis Nicomedis, one of the greatest Blemishes in his Life, and that gave Occasion to his Soldiers to sing to his Face, Gallias Cæfar subegit, Nicomedes Cæsarem +.

Cæfar the Gauls subdu'd, 'tis true,
But Nicomedes Cæfar did subdue.

Ecce Cæfar nunc triumphat, qui subegit Gallias, Nicomedes non triumphat, qui subegit Cæsarem J.

See Cæfar triumphs now for conqu'ring Gaul,
For conqu'ring him, King Nicomede at all No Triumph has.

They took Breath in their Drinking, and dash'd their Wine,

Quis puer ocius
Restinguet ardentis falerni
Pocula prætereunte lympha ||?

What pretty Boy's at Leisure to come in, And cool the Heat of the Falernian Wine, With the clear gliding Stream?

^{*} Hor. lib. 1. Sat. 5. + Suet. in vita Caf. † Id. eod. not quoted by Montaigne. | Hor. lib. 7. Ode. 11.

And

Of Democritus and Heraclitus.

And the roguish Looks and Gestures of our Lacqueys was also in Use amongst them.

> O Jane, à tergo quem nulla ciconia pinsit, Nec manus auriculus imitata est mobilis albas, Nec linguæ quantum sitiet canis Apula tantum *.

O Janus, who both Ways a Spy dost wear, So that no Scoffer, though behind thee, dare Make a Stork's-Bill, Ass-Ears, or far more long, Than thirsty panting Curs shoot out their Tongue.

The Argian and Roman Ladies always mourn'd in White, as ours did formerly here; and should do still, were I to govern in this Point. But there are whole Books of this Argument.

CHAP. L.

Of Democritus and Heraclitus.

HE Judgment is an Utenfil proper for all Subjects, and will have an Oar in every Thing; which is the Reason, that in these Essays I take Hold of all Occasions; where, though it happen to be a Subject I do not very well understand, I try however, sounding it at a Distance, and finding it too deep for my Stature, I keep me on the firm Shore: And this Knowledge that a Man can proceed no farther, is one Effect of it's Virtue, even in the most inconfidering fort of Men. One while in an idle and frivolous Subject, I try to find out Matter whereof to compose a Body, and then to prop and support it. Another while I employ it in a noble Subject, one that has been toft and tumbled by a thousand Hands, wherein a Man can

Persus, Sat. 1. hardly

Montaigne's Esfays.

364 hardly possibly introduce any Thing of his own, the Way being to beaten on every Side, that he must of Necessity walk in the Steps of another. In fuch a Cafe, 'tis the Work of the Judgment to take the Way that feems best, and of a thousand Paths, to determine that this or that was the best chosen. I leave the Choice of my Arguments to Fortune, and take what she first presents me with; they are all alike to me, I never defign to go through any of them; for I never fee all of any Thing: Neither do they who fo largely promife to shew it to others. Of a hundred Members and Faces that every Thing has, I take one, one while to look it over only, another while to ripple up the Skin, and fometimes to pinch it to the Bones: I give a Stab, not so wide but as deep as I can; and am for the most Part tempted to take it in Hand by fome absolute Gracefulness I discover in it. Did I know myself less, I might, perhaps, venture to handle fomething or other to the Bottom, and to be deceiv'd by my own Inability; but sprinkling here one Word, and there another, Patterns cut from several Pieces and scatter'd without Defign, and without engaging myself too far, I am not responsible for them, or oblig'd to keep close to my Subject, without varying at my own Liberty and Pleasure, and giving up myself to Doubt and Incertainty, and to myown governing Method, Ignorance. All Motions discover us. The very same Soul of Cæsar, that made itself so conspicuous in marshalling and commanding the Battle of Pharsalia, was also seen as solicitous and busy in the softer Affairs of Love. A Man makes a Judgment of a Horse, not only by feeing his Menage in his Airs, but by his very Walk; nay, and by feeing him stand in the Stable. Amongst the Functions of the Soul, there are some of a lower and meaner Form, and he that does not fee her in those inferior Offices, as well as those of nobler Note, never fully discover her; and peradventure, she is best discover'd where the moves her own natural Pace. The Winds of Pattion take most Hold of her in her highest Flights; and the rather, by reason that she wholly applies herself to, and exercifes her whole Virtue upon every particular Subject, and never handles more than one Thing at a Time, and that not according to it, but according to herfelf. Things in respect to themselves, have, peradventure, their Weight, Measures

Of Democritus and Heraclitus.

365

Measures and Conditions; but when we once take them into us, the Soul forms them as the pleafes. Death is terrible to Cicero, coveted by Cato, and indifferent to Socrates. Health, Confcience, Authority, Knowledge, Riches, Beauty, and their Contraries, do all strip themselves at their entering into us, and receive a new Robe, and of another Fafhion, from every distinct Soul, and of what Colour, Brown, Bright, Green, Dark; and Quality, Sharp, Sweet, Deep, or Superficial, as best pleases them; for they are not yet agreed upon any common Standard of Forms, Rules, or Proceedings; every one of them is a Queen in her own Dominions. Let us therefore no more excuse ourselves upon the external Qualities of Things; it belongs to us to give ourselves an Account of them. Our Good or Ill has no other Dependance but on ourselves, 'Tis there that our Offerings and our Vows are due, and not to Fortune: She has no Power over our Manners; on the contrary, they draw and make her follow in their Train, and cast her in their own Mould. Why should not I censure Alexander, roaring and drinking at the prodigious Rate he fometimes used to do? Or, if he plaid at Chefs, what String of his Soul was not touched by this idle and childish Game? I hate and avoid it, because it is not Play enough, that it is too grave and ferious a Diversion, and I am asham'd to lay out as much Thought and Study upon that, as would ferve to much better Uses. He did not more pump his Brains about his glorious Expedition into the Indies; and another whom I will not name, took no more Pains to unravel a Passage, upon which depends the Safety of all Mankind. To what a Degree then does this ridiculous Diversion molest the Soul, when all her Faculties shall be summon'd together upon this trivial Account? And how fair an Opportunity she herein gives every one to know, and to make a right Judgment of himself? I do not more thoroughly fift myself in any other Posture than this. What Passion are we exempted from in this infignificant Game? Anger, Spite, Malice, Impatitience, and a vehement Desire of getting the better in a Concern, wherein it were more excusable, to be ambitious of being overcome: For to be eminent, and to excel above the common Rate in frivolous Things, is nothing graceful in a Man of Quality and Honour. What I say in this Example, B b 3

Montaigne's Esfays.

366

may be faid in all others. Every Particle, every Employment of Man, does exalt or accuse him, equally with any other. Democritus and Heraclitus were two Philosophers, the first of whom finding human Condition ridiculous and vain, never appear'd abroad but with a jeering and laughing Countenance: Whereas Heraclitus commiserating that Condition of ours, appear'd always with a forrowful Look, and Tears in his Eyes.

Ridebat quoties à limine moverat unum
Protuleratque pedem, flebat contrarius alter*.

One always, when he o'er his Threshold stept, Laugh'd at the World, the other always wept.

I am clearly for the first Humour; not because it is more pleafant to laugh than to weep, but because it is ruder, and expresses more Contempt than the other; because I think we can never be sufficiently despised to our Desert. Compassion and Bewailing seem to employ some Esteem of, and Value for the Thing bemoan'd: Whereas the Things we laugh at, are by that expressed to be of no Moment or Repute. I do not think that we are so unhappy as we are vain, or have in us fo much Malice as Folly; we are not fo full of Mischief as Inanity; nor so miserable as we are vile and mean. And therefore Diogenes, who past away his Time in rolling himself in his Tub, and made nothing of the great Alexander, effeeming us no better than Flies, or Bladders puft up with Wind, was a sharper and more penetrating, and confequently, in my Opinion, a juster Judge, than Timon, firnam'd the Man-bater; for what a Man hates, he lays to Heart: This last was an Enemy to all Mankind, did positively desire our Ruin, and avoided our Conversation as dangerous, proceeding from wicked and deprav'd Natures : The other valu'd us fo little, that we could neither trouble nor infect him by our Contagion; and left us to herd with one another, not out of Fear, but Contempt

* Juven. Sas. 10.

of

Of the Vanity of Words.

367

of our Society: Concluding us as incapable of doing Good as Ill. Of the same Strain was Statilius's Answer, when Brutus courted him into the Conspiracy against Cæsar: He was satisfy'd that the Enterprize was just; but he didnot think Mankind so considerable, as to deserve a wise Man's Concern: According to the Doctrine of Hegesias; who said, That a wise Man ought to do nothing but for himself, forasmuch as he only was worthy of it: And to the Saying of Theodorus, That it was not reasonable a wise Man should hazard himself for his Country, and endanger Wisdom for a Company of Fools. Our Condition is as ridiculous as risible.

CHAP. LI.

Of the Vanity of Words.

Rhetorician of Times past, said, That to make little Things appear great, was his Profession. This also a Shoemaker can do; he can make a great Shoe for a little Foot: They would in Sparta have fent fuch a Fellow to be whipp'd, for making Profession of a lying and deceitful Art: And I fancy, that Archidamus, who was King of that Country, was a little surpriz'd at the Answer of Thucydides, when enquiring of him, which was the better Wrestler, Pericles or he; he reply'd, That it was hard to affirm; for when I have thrown him, faid he, he always perfuades the Spectators that he had no Fall, and carries away the Prize. They who paint, pounce and plaister up the Ruins of Women, filling up their Wrinkles and Deformities, are less to blame; because it is no great Matter, whether we see them in their natural Complexions or not. Whereas these make it their Business to deceive, not our Sight only but our Judgments, and to adulterate and corrupt the very Effence of Things. The Republicks that have maintain'd themselves in a regular and well-modell'd Government such as those of Lacedæmon and Crete, had Orators in no very great Esteem. Aristo did wisely define Rhetorick to be a B b 4

to

n

Science to perfuade the People; Socrates and Plato, an Art to flatter and deceive: And those who deny it in the general Description, verify it throughout in their Precepts. The Mahometans will not suffer their Children to be instructed in it, as being useless; and the Athenians perceiving of how pernicious Consequence the Practice of it was, it being in their City of universal Esteem, order'd the principal Part, which is to move Affections, with their Exordiums and Perorations, to be taken away. 'Tis an Engine invented to manage and govern a diforderly and tumultuous Rabble, and is never made Use of but, like Physick to the Sick, in the Paroxisms of a discomposed State. In those States, where the Vulgar or the Ignorant, or both together, have been all powerful, and able to give Law, as in Athens, Rhodes and Rome, and where the Publick Affairs have been in a continual Tempest of Commotion, to such Places have the Orators always repair'd. And, in Truth, we find few Persons in those Republicks, who have push'd their Fortunes to any great Degree of Eminence, without the Affiftance of Elocution: Pompey, Cafar, Craffus, Lucullus, Lentulus and Metellus, have thence taken their chiefest Spring to mount to that Degree of Authority, to which they did at last arrive; making it of greater Use to them than Arms, contrary to the Opinion of better Times. For L. Volumnius speaking publickly in Favour of the Election of 2. Fabius and Pub. Decius, to the Consular Dignity: Theie are Men, faid he, born for War, and great in Execution, in the Combat of the Tongue altogether to feek; Spirits truly confular. The Subtle, Eloquent and Learned, are only good for the City, to make Prætors of, to administer Justice. Eloquence flourish'd most at Rome, when the publick Affairs were in the worst Condition, and the Republick most disquieted with intestine Commotions, as a frank and untill'd Soil bears the worst Weeds. By which it should feem, that a Monarchical Government has less Need of it than any other: For the Brutality and Facility, natural to the common People, which render them subject to be turn'd and twin'd, and led by the Ears by this charming Harmony of Words, without weighing or confidering the Truth and Reality of Things by the Force of Reason: This Facility, I say, is not easily found in a single Person, and it is also more easy, by good Education and Advice, to secure him from the Impression of this Poison. There never was any famous Orator known to come out of Persia or Macedon.

I have entered into this Discourse upon the Occasion of an Italian I lately received into my Service, who was Clerk of the Kitchen to the late Cardinal Caraffa till his Death. I put this Fellow upon an Account of his Office: Where he fell to discourse of this Palate-Science, with such a settled Countenance, and magisterial Gravity, as if he had been handling some profound Point of Divinity. He made a learned Distinction of the several Sorts of Appetites, of that which a Man has before he begins to eat, and of those after the fecond and third Service: The Means simply to fatisfy the first, and then to raise and quicken the other two: The ordering of the Sauces, first in general, and then proceeded to the Qualities of the Ingredients, and their Effects: The Differences of Sallets, according to their Seasons, which of them ought to be served up hot, and which cold: The Manner of their Garnishment and Decoration, to render them yet more acceptable to the Eye: After which he entered upon the Order of the whole Service, full of weighty and important Confiderations.

Quo gestu lepores, & quo gallina secetur *.

Nor with less Criticism did observe How we a Hare, and how a Hen should carve.

And all this fet out with lofty and magnifick Words; the very same we make Use of, when we discourse of the Government of an Empire. Which learned Lecture of my Man, brought this of Terence into my Memory.

Hoc falsum est, hoc adustum est, hoc lautum est parum, Illud rectè iterum sic memento, sedulo Moneo quæ possum pro mea sapientia.

Postremo tanquam in speculum, in patinas, Demea, Inspicere jubeo, & moneo quid facto usus sit +.

* Juven. Sat. 5.

+ Ter. Adelp. Act 3. Sc. 5.

This is too falt, this burnt, this is too plain, That's well, remember to do fo again. Thus do I still advise to have Things sit, According to the Talent of my Wit. And then (my Demea) I command my Cook, That into ev'ry Dish he pry and look, As if it were a Mirror, and go on To order all Things as they should be done.

And yet even the Greeks themselves did very much admire, and highly applaud the Order and Disposition that Paulus Æmilius observed in the Feast he made for them at his Return from Macedon: But I do not here speak of Effects, I speak of Words only. I do not know whether it may have the same Operation upon other Men that it has upon me: But when I hear our Architects thunder out their bombast Words of Pilasters, Architraves, and Cornices, of the Corintbian and Dorick Orders, and fuch like Stuff, my Imagination is prefently possessed with the Palace of Apollidonius in Amadis de Gaul; when, after all, I find them but the paultry Pieces of my own Kitchen-Door. And to hear Men talk of Metonymies, Metaphors, and Allegories, and other Grammar Words, would not a Man think they fignify'd some rare and exotick Form of Speaking? And this other is a Gullery of the same Stamp, to call the Offices of our Kingdom by the lofty Titles of the Romans, though they have no Similitude of Function, Authority, or Power. And this also, which I doubt will one Day turn to the Reproach of our present polite Age, unworthily and indifferently to confer upon any we think fit, the most glorious Sirnames with which Antiquity honoured but one or two Persons in several Ages. Plato carried away the Sirname of Divine by fo universal a Confent, that never any one repined at it, or attempted to take it from him: And yet the Italians, who pretend, and with good Reafon, to more fprightly Wits and founder Dilcouries than the other Nations of their Time, have lately honoured Aretine with the fame Title; in whose Writings, except it be a tumid Phrase, set out with some smart Periods, ingenious indeed, but far fetch'd and fantastick, and the Eloquence (he it what it will) I see nothing in him above the ordinary Writers of his Time, so far is he from approaching the ancient Divinity. And we make nothing of giving the Sirname of Great to Princes that have nothing in them above a popular Grandeur.

Of the Parsimony of the Ancients. 371

CHAP. LII.

Of the Parsimony of the Ancients.

Ttilius Regulus, General of the Roman Army in Africk, in the Height of all his Glory and Victories over the Carthaginians, writ to the Republick to acquaint them, that a certain Peafant whom he had left in Trust with his whole Estate, which was in all but seven Acres of Land, was run away with all his Instruments of Husbandry, entreating therefore, that they would please to call him Home, that he might take Order in his own Affairs, lest his Wife and Children should suffer by this Difafter: Whereupon the Senate appointed another to manage his Bufiness, caused his Losses to be made good, and ordered his Family to be maintained at the publick Expence. The elder Cato returning Conful from Spain, fold his War-Horse, to fave the Money it would have cost in bringing him back by Sea into Italy; and being Governor of Sardinia, made all his Visits on Foot, without other Attendants, than one Officer of the Republick, to hold up the Train of his Gown and carry a Cenfer for Sacrifices; and, for the most Part, carried his Mail himself. He bragged, that he had never worn a Gown that cost above ten Crowns, nor had ever fent above Ten-pence to the Market for one Day's Provision; and that as to his Country Houfes, he had not one that was rough cast on the Out-side. Scipio Æmilianus, after two Triumphs, and two Confulships, went an Embassy with no more than seven Servants in his Train. 'Tis faid, that Homer had never more than one, Plato three, and Zeno, Founder of the Sect of Stoicks, none at all. Tiberius Gracchus was allowed but Five-pence

Half-penny a Day, when employed as publick Minister about the publick Affairs, and being at that time the greatest Man of Rome.

CHAP. LIII.

Of a Saying of Cæsar.

If we would fometimes bestow a little Consideration upon ourselves, and employ that Time in examining our own Abilities which we spend in prying into other Men's Actions, and discovering Things without us, we should soon perceive of how insirm and decaying Materials this Fabrick of ours is composed. Is it not a singular Testimony of Impersection, that we cannot establish our Satisfaction in any one Thing, and that even our own Fancy and Desire should deprive us of the Power to choose what is most proper and useful for us? A very good Proof of this, is the great Dispute that has ever been amongst the Philosophers, of sinding out a Man's principal and sovereign Good; that Dispute continues yet, and will eternally continue, without Solution or Agreement.

——Dum abest quod avemus, id exuperare videtur, Cætera, post aliud cum contigit illud avemus, Et sitis æqua tenet *.

The absent we covet, best doth seem,
The next that comes captivates our Esteem
At the same rate.

Whatever that is that falls into our Knowledge and Possession, we find it satisfies not, and still pant after Things to come, and unknown; and these because the present

* Lucret. 1. 3.

do

do not fatiate and glut us; not that, in my Judgment, they have not in them wherewith to do it, but because we seize them with an unruly and immoderate Haste.

Nam cum vidit hic ad victum quæ flagitat usus,
Et per quæ possent vitam consistere tutam,
Omnia jam sirme mortalibus esse parata:
Divitiis homines, & honore & laude potentis
Affluere, atque bona natorum excellere sama,
Nec minus esse domi cuiquam tamen anxia corda,
Atque animum infestis cogi servire querelis:
Intellexit ibi vitium vas sacere ipsum,
Omniaque illius vitio corrumpitur intus
Quæ collata soris, & commoda quæque venirent*.

For when he faw all Things that had regard To Life's Subfiftence for Mankind prepar'd, That Men in Wealth and Honours did abound, Had hopeful Issue fet their Tables round; And yet had Hearts as anxious as before, Murmuring amidst their Happiness and Store: He then perceiv'd the Vessel was to blame, And gave a Smatch to all that in it came, That neither from without him was convey'd, To have him happy and contented made.

Our Appetite is irrefolute and fickle, it can neither keep nor enjoy any thing graceful, and as it should: And Man concluding it to be the Fault of the Things he is possessed of, fills himself with, and feeds himself upon the Idea of Things he neither knows nor understands, to which he devotes his Hopes and his Desires, paying them all Reverence and Honour, according to the Saying of Cæsar, Communi sit vitio naturæ, ut invisis latitantibus atque incognitis rebus magis considamus, vehementiù sque exterreamur. Tis the common Vice of Nature, that we repose most Considence, and receive the greatest Apprehensions, from Things unseen, concealed, and unknown.

* Lucret.

CHAP.

an a mine Fe

bl w

th

01

W

by

F. it

n

al H w to fi B n d k S L f

CHAP. LIV.

Of vain Subtilties.

Here are a Sort of little Knacks, and frivolous Subtilties, from which Men sometimes expect to derive Reputation and Applause: As the Poets, who compose whole Poems, with every Line beginning with the fame Letter: We see the Shapes of Eggs, Globes, Wings and Hatchets cut out by the ancient Greeks, by the Measure of their Verses, making them longer or shorter, to reprefent such or such a Figure. Much in this Manner did he spend his Time, who made it his Business to compute into how many feveral Orders the Letters of the Alphabet might be transposed, and found out that incredible Number mention'd in Plutarch. I am mightily pleas'd with the Humour of the Gentleman, who, having a Man brought before him, that had learn'd to throw a Grain of Millet with fuch Dexterity as never to miss the Eye of a Needle; and being afterwards defired to give something for the Reward of so rare a Performance, he pleafantly, and in my Opinion ingenioully, ordered a certain Number of Bushels of the same Grain to be delivered to him, that he might not want wherewithal to exercise so famous an Art. 'Tis a strong Evidence of a weak Judgment, when Men approve of Things for their being rare and new, or yet for the Difficulty; where Virtue and Usefulness are not conjoined to recommend them. I come just now from playing with my own Family, at who could find out the most Things, that had their principal Force in their two Extremities; as, Sire, which is a Title given to the greatest Person in the Nation, the King, and also to the Vulgar, as Pedlars and Mechanicks, but never to any Degree of Men between. The Women of great Quality are all called Madam, inferior Gentlewomen, Mademoiselle, and the meanest Sort of Women, Madam, as the first. The Canopy of State over

Tables are not permitted, but in the Palaces of Princes and Taverns. Democritus said, that Gods and Beasts had a more exact and perfect Sense than Men, who are of a middle Form. The Romans wore the fame Habit at Funerals and Feafts; and it is most certain, that an extreme Fear, and an extreme Ardour of Courage, do equally trouble and lax the Belly. The Nickname of Trembling with which they firnamed Sancho XII, King of Navarre, fufficiently informeth, that Valour will cause a Trembling in the Limbs, as well as Fear. The Friends of that King, or of some other Person, who upon the like Occasion was wont to be in the same Disorder, tried to compose him, by representing the Danger less, he was going to engage himself in: You understand me ill, said he, for could my Flesh know the Danger my Courage will presently carry it into, it would fink down to the Ground. The Faintness that surprizes us from Frigidity, or dislike in the Exertiles of Venus, are also occasioned by a too violent Desire, and an immoderate Heat. Extreme Coldness, and extreme Heat, boil and roast. Aristotle says, that Sows of Lead will melt, and run with Cold, in the Extremity of Winter, as well as with a vehement Heat. Defire and Satiety fill all the Gradations above and below Pleafure with Grief. Brutality and Wisdom meet in the same Center of Sentiment and Resolution, in the suffering of human Accidents; the Wife controul and triumph over Ill; the others know it not: These last are, as a Man may say, on this Side of Accidents, the other are beyond them; who after having well weighed and confidered their Qualities, meafured and judged them what they are, by Virtue of a vigorous Soul leap out of their Reach. They disdain and trample them under Foot, having a folid and well fortified Soul, against which the Darts of Fortune coming to strike they must of Necessity rebound and blunt themselves, meeting with a Body upon which they can fix no Impression; the ordinary and middle Conditions of Men are lodged betwixt these two Extremes, consisting of such, who perceive Evils, feel them, and are not able to support them. Infancy and Decrepitude meet in the Imbecillity of the Brain: Avance and Profusion in the same Thirst and Desire of getting. A Man may fay, with some Colour of Truth, that there is an Abecedarian Ignorance that precedes Knowledge; and a Doctoral Ignorance that comes after it; an Ignorance which Knowledge creates and begets, at the same time that The dispatches and destroys the first. Of mean Understandings, little inquisitive, and little instructed, are made good Christians, who by Reverence and Obedience implicitly believe, and are constant in their Belief. In the moderate Understandings, and the middle fort of Capacities, the Error of Opinions is begot, and they have some Colour of Reaion on their Side, to impute our walking on in the old beaten Path to Simplicity, and Brutishness, I mean in us who have not informed ourselves by Study. The higher and nobler Souls, more folid and clear fighted, make up another fort of true Believers; who by a long and religious Investigation of Truth, have obtained a clearer and more penetrating Light into the Scriptures, and have discovered the Mysterious and Divine Secret of our Ecclesiastical Polity. And yet we see some, who, by this middle Step are arrived to that supreme Degree with marvellous Fruit and Confirmation; as to the utmost Limit of Chritian Intelligence, and enjoying their Victory with great ipiritual Consolation, humble Acknowledgment of the Divine Favour, exemplary Reformation of Manners, and fingular Modesty. I do not intend with these to rank some others, who to clear themselves from all Suspicion of their former Errors, and to fatisfy us, that they are found and firm to us, render themselves extreme indiscreet and unjust, in the carrying on our Cause, and by that Means blemish it with infinite Reproaches of Violence and Oppression. The simple Peasants are good People, and so are the Philosopers: Men of strong and clear Reason, and whose Souls are enrich'd with an ample Instruction of profitable Sciences. The Mongrels who have disdained the first Form of the Ignorance of Letters, and have not been able to attain the other, (fitting betwixt two Stools, as I and a great many more of us do,) are dangerous, foolish, and importunate; these are they that trouble the World. And therefore it is, that I, for my own Part, retreat as much as I can towards my first and natural Station, from whence I fo vainly attempted to advance. The vulgar and purely natural Poefy, has in it certain Proprieties and Graces, Graces, by which she may come into some Comparison with the greatest Beauty of a Poefy persected by Art: As is evident in our Gascon Villanels and Songs, that are brought us from Nations that have no Knowledge of any Manner of Science, nor so much as the Use of Writing. The indifferent and middle Sort of Poefy betwixt thefe two, is despised, of no Value, Honour, or Esteem. But feeing that the Ice being once broke, and a Path laid open to the Fancy, I have found, as it commonly falls out, that what we make Choice of for a rare and difficult Subject, proves to be nothing fo, and that after the Invention is once warm, it finds out an infinite Number of parallel Examples. I shall only add this one; that were these Essays of mine considerable enough to deserve a Censure, it might then I think fall out, that they would not much take with common and vulgar Capacities, nor be very acceptable to the fingular and excellent Sort of Men; for the first would not understand them enough, and the last too much, and so they might hover in the middle Region.

CHAP. LV.

Of Smells.

Thas been reported of others, as well as of Alexander the Great, that their Sweat exhaled an odoriferous Smell, occasioned by some very uncommon and extraordinary Constitution, of which Plutarch and others have been inquisitive into the Cause. But the ordinary Constitution of human Bodies is quite otherwise, and their best and chiefest Excellency is to be exempt from Smells: Nay, the Sweetness even of the purest Breaths has nothing in it of greater Persection, than to be without any offensive Smell, like those of healthful Children; which made Plutarch say,

Vol. I.

Cc

Mulier

at

MONTAIGNE'S EsTays.

Muliere tum bene olet, ubi nihil olet *.

That Woman we a fweet one call, Whose Body breathes no Scent at all.

And fuch as make Use of these exotick Perfumes, are with good Reason to be suspected of some natural Impersection, which they endeavour by these Odours to conceal, according to that of Mr. Johnson, which, without Offence to Monsieur de Montaigne, I will here presume to insert, it being at least as well faid, as any of those he quotes out of the ancient Poets,

> Still to be neat, still to be drest, As you were going to a Feast, Still to be powder'd, still perfum'd, Lady, it is to be prefum'd, Though Art's hid Causes are not found, All is not fweet, all is not found +.

As may be judged by these following,

Rides nos, Coracine, nil olentes: Malo quam bene olere, nil olere 1.

Because thou, Coracinus, still dost go With Musk and Ambergrease perfumed so, We under thy Contempt, forfooth, must fall; I'd rather than fmell fweet, not fmell at all:

And elsewhere,

378

Posthume, non bene olet, qui bene semper olet ||.

He does not naturally fmell well, Who always of Perfumes does fmell.

Plant. Molest. Art. 1. Sc. 3. + Ben Johnson. ‡ Mart. lib. 6. Epig. 55. | Id. lib. 2. Ep. 1

| Id. lib. 2. Ep. 12.

Of Smells.

379

I am, nevertheless, a strange Lover of good Smells, and as much abominate the ill Ones, which also I feach at a greater Distance, I think, than other Men:

Namque fagacius unus odoror, Polypus, an gravis hir sutis cubet hircus in alis, Quam canis acer ubi lateat sus †.

For I can fmell a putrid Polypus, Or the rank Arm-pits of a Red-hair'd Fuss, As foon as best nos'd Hound the stinking Sty, Where the wild Boar does in the Forest lye.

Of Smells, the fimple and natural feem to be most pleasing. Let the Ladies look to that, for 'tis chiefly their Concern. In the wildest Parts of Barbary, the Scythian Women, after Bathing, were wont to powder and crust their Faces, and whole Bodies, with a certain odoriferous Drug, growing in their own Territories; which being cleanfed off, when they came to have Familiarity with Men, they were found perfumed and fleek: 'Tis not to be believed, how strangely all Sorts of Odours cleave to me, and how apt my Skin is to imbibe them. He that complains of Nature, that she has not furnished Mankind with a Vehicle to convey Smells to the Nose, had no Reason; for they will do it themselves; especially to me: My very Mustachio's perform that Office; for if I stroke them but with my Gloves or Handkerchief, the Smell will remain a whole Day: They will reproach me where I have been; the close, luscious, devouring and melting Kisses of youthful Ardour, would, in my wanton Age, have left a Sweetness upon my Lips for several Hours after. And yet I have ever found myself very little subject to Epidemick Difeases, that are caught either by conversing with the Sick, or bred by the Contagion of the Air; I have very well escaped from those of my Time, of which there has been feveral virulent Sorts in our Cities and Armies. We read of Socrates, that though he never departed from Athens, † Hor. Ep. 12.

during

380 Montaigne's Effays.

during the frequent Plagues that infested that City, he was the only Man that was never infected. Physicians might (I believe) if they would, extract greater Utility from Odours than they do; for I have often observed, that they cause an Alteration in me, and work upon my Spirits according to their feveral Virtues; which makes me approve of what is faid, namely, That the Use of Incense and Perfumes in Churches, fo ancient, and fo univerfally received in all Nations and Religions, was intended to chear us, and to rouze and purify the Senses, the better to fit us for Contemplation. I could have been glad, the better to judge of it, to have tasted the Culinary Art of those Cooks, who had so rare a Way of seasoning exotick Odours with the Relish of Meats; as it was particularly observed in the Service of the King of Tunis, who, in our Days, landed at Naples, to have an Interview with Charles the Emperor, where his Dishes were farced with odoriferous Drugs, to that Degree of Expence, that the Cookery of one Peacock and two Pheasants amounted to an hundred Ducats, to dress them after their Fashion. And when the Carver came to break them up, not only the Dining-Room, but all the Apartments of his Palace, and the adjoining Streets were filled with an Aromatick Vapour, which did not presently vanish. My chiefest Care in chusing my Lodgings, is always to avoid a thick and stinking Air; and those beautiful Cities of Venice and Paris have very much lessened the Kindness I had for them, the one by the offensive Smell of her Marshes, and the other of her Dirt.

CHAP.

CHAP. LVI.

Of Prayers.

Propose formless and undetermin'd Fancies, like those who publish subtle Questions who publish subtle Questions, to be after disputed upon in the Schools, not to establish Truth, but to seek it : I submit them to the better Judgments of those, whose Office it is to regulate, not my Writings and Actions only, but moreover my very Thoughts and Opinions. Let what I here fet down meet with Correction or Applaufe, it shall be of equal Welcome and Utility to me, myself before-hand condemning it for abfurd and impious, if any thing shall be found through Ignorance or Inadvertency, couched in this Rhapfody contrary to the Refolutions and Prescriptions of the Roman Catholick Church, in which I was born, and in which I will die. And yet always submitting to the Au-, thority of their Cenfure, who have an absolute Power over me, I thus temerariously venture at every Thing, as upon this present Subject.

I don't know whether I am deceived or not; but fince by a particular Favour of the Divine Bounty, a certain Form of Prayer has been prescribed and dictated to us, Word by Word, from the Mouth of God himself, I have ever been of Opinion, that we ought to have it in more frequent Use, than we yet have, and if I were worthy to advise, at sitting down to, and rising from our Tables, at our rising and going to Bed, and in every particular Action, wherein Prayer is required, I would have Christians always make Use of the Lord's Prayer; if not that Prayer alone, yet at least always. The Church may lengthen or alter Prayers according to the Necessity of our Instruction, for I know very well, that it is always the same in Substance, and the same Thing: But yet such a Preserence ought to be given to that Prayer, that the People should have it continually in their Mouths;

tor it is most certain, that all necessary Petitions are com-C c 3 prehended

Montaigne's Essays.

382

prehended in it, and that it is infinitely proper for all Occasions. 'Tis the only Prayer I use in all Places and Conditions, and what I still repeat instead of changing; whence it also happens, that I have no other by Heart but that only. It just now comes into my Mind, from whence we should derive that Error of having Recourse to God in all our Designs and Enterprizes, to call him to our Assistance in all Sorts of Affairs, and in all Places where our Weakness stands in Need of Support, without considering whether the Occasion be just, or otherwise, and to invoke his Name and Power, in what Condition soever we are, or Action we are engaged in, how vicious foever: He is indeed our fole and only Protector, and can do all Things for us: But though he is pleased to honour us with his paternal Care, he is, notwithstanding, as just as he is good and mighty, and does oftener exercise his Justice than his Power, and favours us according to that, and not according to our Petitions. Plato in his Laws, makes three Sorts of Belief injurious to the Gods; that there is none; that they concern not themselves about human Affairs; and, that they never reject or deny any thing to our Vows, Offerings, and Sacrifices. The first of these (Errors according to his Opinion) did never continue rooted in any Man, from his Infancy to his old Age; the other two, he confesses, Men might be obstinate in. God's Justice and his Power are inseparable, and therefore in vain we invoke his Power in an unjust Cause: We are to have our Souls pure and clean, at that Moment at least, wherein we pray to him, and purified from all vicious Passions, otherwise we ourselves present him the Rods wherewith to chastife us. Instead of repairing any thing we have done amifs, we double the Wickedness and the Offence, whilst we offer to him, to whom we are to fue for Pardon, an Affection full of Irreverence and Hatred. Which makes me not very apt to applaud those whom I observe to be so frequent on their Knees, if the Actions nearest of Kind to Prayer, do not give me some Evidence of Reformation.

Tempora Sanctonico velas adoperta Cucullo*.

* Juven. Sat. 8.

With

With Night-Adulteries, if being foul, Thou shad'st thy guilty Forehead with a Cowl.

And the Practice of a Man that mixes Devotion with an execrable Life, seems, in some Sort, more to be condemned than that of a Man conformable to his own Propension, and dissolute throughout: And, for that Reason it is, that our Church denies Admittance to, and Communion with, Men obstinate and incorrigible in any Kind of Impiety. We pray only by Custom, and for fashion's Sake; or rather we read and pronounce our Prayers aloud, which is no better than an hypocritical Shew of Devotion: And I am scandalized to see a Man make the Sign of the Cross thrice at the Benedicite, and as often at another's faying Grace, (and the more, because it is a Sign I have in great Veneration and constant Use upon solemn Occasions) and to dedicate all the other Hours of the Day to Acts of Malice, Avarice, and Injustice; one Hour to God, the rest to the Devil, as if by Commutation and Confent. 'Tis a Wonder to me, Actions so various in themselves, succeed one another with fuch an Uniformity of Method, as not to interfere, nor fuffer any Alteration, even upon the very Confines and Passes from the one to the other. What a prodigious Conscience must that be, that can be at Quiet within itfelf, whilst it harbours under the same Roof, with so agreeing and fo calm a Society, both the Crime and the Judge? A Man whose whole Meditation is continually working upon nothing but Impurity, which he knows to be fo odious to Almighty God, what can he fay when he comes to fpeak to him? He reforms, but immediately falls into a Relapse. If the Object of the Divine Justice, and the Presence of his Maker, did, as he pretends, strike and chastife his Soul, how short soever the Repentance might be, the very Fear of offending that infinite Majesty, would so often present itself to his Imagination, that he would soon see himself Master of those Vices that are most natural and habitual in him. But what shall we say of those who settle their whole Course of Life upon the Profit and Emolument of Sins which they know to be mortal? How many Trades and Vocations have we admitted and countenanced amongst Cc 4

384 Montaigne's Essays.

us, whose very Essence is vicious? And he that opening himfelf to me voluntarily told me, That he had all his Life-time professed and practised a Religion, in his Opinion, damnable and contrary to that which he had in his Heart, only to preferve his Credit and the Honour of his Employments, how could his Courage suffer so infamous a Confession? What can Men fay to the Divine Justice upon this Subject? Their Repentance confifting in a visible and manifest Reformation and Restitution, they lose the Colour of alledging it both to God and Man. Are they so impudent as to sue for Remisfion without Satisfaction, and without Penitency or Remorfe? I look upon these as in the same Condition with the first: But the Obstinacy is not there so easy to be overcome. This Contrariety and Volubility of Opinion, fo fudden and violent, as they pretend, is a Kind of Miracle to me. They present us with the State of an indigestible Anxiety and Doubtfulness of Mind. It seemed to me a fantastick and ridiculous Imagination in those, who, these late Years past, used to reproach every Man whom they knew to be of any extraordinary Parts, and, at the same Time, made Profession of the Roman Catholick Religion, that it was but outwardly; maintaining, moreover, to do him Honour forfooth, that whatever he might pretend to the contrary, he could not but in his Heart be of their reformed Opinion. An untoward Disease, that a Man should be so rivetted to his own Belief, as to fancy, that no Man can believe otherwife than as he does; and yet worse in this, that they should entertain so vicious an Opinion of such Parts as to think, that any Man fo qualified, should prefer any present Advantage of Fortune, before the Promises of eternal Life, and the Means of eternal Salvation. They may believe me: Could any thing have tempted my Youth, the Ambition of the Danger and Difficulties in the late Commotions, had not been the least Motives.

It is not without very good Reason, in my Opinion, that the Church interdicts the promiscuous, indiscreet, and irreverent Use of the Holy and Divine Pfalms, with which the Holy Ghost inspired King David. We ought not to mix God in our Actions, but with the highest Reverence and Causion. That Poefy is too sacred to be put to no other Use than to exercise the Lungs, and to delight our Ears.

T

hi

av

N

K

to R

fc

Ears. It ought to come from the Soul, and not from the Tongue. It is not fit that a 'Prentice in his Shop, amongit his vain and frivolous Thoughts, should be permitted to pass away his Time, and divert himself with such facred Things. Neither is it decent to fee the Holy Bible, the Rule of our Worship and Belief, tumbled up and down a Hall, or a Kitchen. They were formerly Mysteries, but are now become Sports and Recreations. 'Tis a Book too ferious and too venerable to be curforily or flightly turned over. The Reading of the Scripture ought to be a temperate and premeditated Act, and to which Men should always add this devout Preface, Sursum Corda, preparing even the Body to 6 humble and composed a Gesture and Countenance as shall evidence their Veneration and Attention. Neither is it a Book for every one to fift, but the Study of select Men set apart for that Purpose, and whom Almighty God has been pleased to call to that Office and sacred Function: The Wicked and Ignorant blemish and deprave it. 'Tis not a Story to tell, but a History to fear and adore. Are not they then pleasant Men, who think they have render'd this fit for the People's handling, by translating it into the Vulgar Tongue? Does the understanding of all therein contain'd only stick at Words? Shall I venture to say farther, that by coming so near to understand a little, they are much wider of the whole Scope than before. A total Ignorance, and wholly depending upon the Exposition of other qualify'd Persons, was more knowing and salutary than this vain and verbal Knowledge, which has only prov'd the Nurse of Temerity and Presumption. And I do farther believe, that the Liberty every one has taken to disperse the facred Writ into fo many Idioms, carries with it a great deal more of Danger than Utility. The Jews, Mahometans, and almost all others, have espoused and reverenced the Language wherein their Laws and Mysteries were first conceiv'd, and have expresly, and not without Colour of Reason, forbid the Version or Alteration of them into any other. Are we affur'd, that in Biscay and in Brittany, there are competent Judges enough of this Affair, to establish this Translation into their own Language? Why the universal Church has not a more difficult and folemn Judgment to make. One of our Greek Historians does justly accuse the Age he liv'd

386 MONTAIGNE'S Effays.

in, for that the Secrets of the Christian Religion were disperfed into the Hands of every Mechanick, to expound and argue upon according to his own Fancy; and that we ought to be much asham'd, we, who by God's especial Favour enjoy the purest Mysteries of Piety, to suffer them to be profan'd by the ignorant Rabble; confidering, that the Gentiles expresly forbad Socrates, Plato, and the other Sages, to enquire into, or so much as to mention the Things committed only to the Priests of Delphos; saying moreover, that the Factions of Princes, upon theological Accounts, are not arm'd with Zeal, but Fury; that Zeal springs from the divine Wildom and Justice, and governs itself with Prudence and Moderation; but degenerates into Hatred and Envy, producing Tares and Nettles, instead of Corn and Wine, when conducted by human Passions. And it was truly said of another, who advising the Emperor Theodosius, told him, That Disputes did not so much rock the Schisms of the Church afleep, as it rouz'd and animated Herefies. That therefore all Contentions and logical Disputations were to be avoided, and Men absolutely to acquiesce in the Prescriptions and Formula's of Faith, establish'd by the Ancients. And the Emperor Andronicus, having over-heard some great Men at high Words in his Palace with Lopodius, about a Point of ours of great Importance, gave them for fevere a Check, as to threaten to cause them to be thrown into the River if they did not defift. The very Women and Children, now-a-days, take upon them to document the oldest and most experienc'd Men about the Ecclesiastical Laws: Whereas the first of those of Plato forbids them to enquire fo much as into the Civil Laws; which were to stand instead of divine Ordinances: And allowing the old Men to confer amongst themselves, or with the Magistrate, about those Things, he adds, provided it be not in the Predence of young or profane Persons. A Bishop has left in Writing, that, at the other End of the World, there is an Isle by the Ancients call'd Dioscorides, abundantly fertile in all Sorts of Trees and Fruits, and of an exceeding healthful Air; the Inhabitants of which are Christians, having Churches and Altars only adorn'd with Crucifixes, without any other Images; great Observers of Fasts and Fealts; exact Payers of their Tythes to the Priest; and so chaste, that none of them are permitted to have to do with more than one Woman in his Life: As to the rest, so content with their Condition, that, environ'd with the Sea, they know nothing of Navigation; and so simple, that they understand not one Syllable of the Religion they profess, and wherein they are so devout. A Thing incredible to such as do not know, that the Pagans, who are so zealous Idolaters, know nothing more of their Gods, than their bare Names and their Statues. The ancient Beginning of Menalippus, a Tragedy of Euripides, ran thus;

ır

t

Jupiter, for that Name alone, Of what thou art, to me is known.

I have known also, in my Time, some Men's Writings found Fault with, for being purely human and philosophical, without any Mixture of Divinity; and yet whoever should, on the contrary fay, that divine Doctrine, as Queen and Regent of the rest, better, and with greater Decency, keeps her State apart: That she ought to be Sovereign throughout, not Subfidiary and Saffragan: And that, peradventure, Grammatical, Rhetorical, and Logical Examples, may elsewhere be more suitably chosen, and also the Arguments for the Stage and publick Entertainments, than from so sacred a Matter: That divine Reasons are consider'd with greater Veneration and Attention, when by themselves, and in their own proper Stile, than when mix'd with, and adapted to, human Discourses: That it is a Fault much more often observ'd, that the Divines write too humanly, than that the Humanists write not theologically enough: Philosophy, fays St. Chrysoftom, has long been banish'd the holy Schools, as an Hand-maid altogether useless and thought unworthy to peep, so much as in passing by the Door, into the Sacrifice of the divine Doctrine: And that the human Way of speaking is of a much lower Form, and ought not to serve herself with the Dignity and Majesty of divine Eloquence. I fay, whoever, on the contrary, should object against all this, would not be without Reason on his Side. Let who will, Verbis Indisciplinatis, talk of Fortune, Destiny, Accident, good and evil Hap, and other fuch like Phrases, according to his own Humour; 388 MONTAIGNE'S Esfays.

I, for my Part, propose Fancies merely human, and merely my own, and that fimply, as human Fancies, and feparately confider'd, not as determin'd by an Arrelt from Heaven, or incapable of Doubt or Dispute. Matter of Opinion, not Matter of Faith. Things which I discourse of according to my own Capacity, not what I believe according to God; which also I do after a Laical, not Clerical, and yet always after a very religious Manner. And it were as rational to affirm, That an Edict, enjoining all People, but such as are public Professors of Divinity, to be very referv'd in writing of Religion, would carry with it a very good Colour of Utility and Justice, and me, amongst the rest, to hold my prating. I have been told, that even those who are not of our Church, do nevertheless, amongst themselves, expresly forbid the Name of God to be us'd in common Discourse; not so much as by way of Interjection, Exclamation, Affertion of a Truth, or Comparison; and I think them in the right. And upon what Occasion soever we call upon God to accompany and affist us, it ought always to be done with the greatest Reverence and Devotion. There is, as I remember, a Passage in Xenophon, where he tells us, that we ought fo much the / more feldom to call upon God, by how much it is hard to compose our Souls to such a Degree of Calmness, Penitency, and Devotion, as it ought to be in at such Time, otherwise our Prayers are not only vain and fruitless, but vicious in themselves, Forgive us (we say) our Trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. What do we mean by this Petition, but that we present him a Soul free from all Rancour and Revenge? And yet we make nothing of invoking God's Affiftance in our Vices, and inviting him into our unjust Defigns.

Quæ nisi seductis nequeas committere divis *.

Which only to the Gods a-part, Thou hast the Impudence to impart.

The covetous Man prays for the Conversation of his superfluous, and, peradventure, ill-got Riches; the Ambitious,

* Perf. Sat. 2.

for

for Victory, and the Conduct of his Fortune: The Thief calls God to his Affistance, to deliver him from the Dangers and Difficulties that obstruct his wicked Designs; or returns him Thanks for the Facility he has met with in robbing a poor Peasant. At the Door of the House they are going to storm, or break into by Force of a Petarre, they fall to Prayers for Success, having their Instruction and Hopes full of Cruelty, Avarice, and Lust.

Hoc ipsum quo tu Jovis aurem impellere tentas, Dic agedum Staio, pro Jupiter, o bone clamet, Jupiter, at sese non clamet Jupiter ipse *.

The Pray'rs with which thou dost assault Jove's Ear, Repeat to Staius, whom thou soon wilt hear. But Jupiter, good Jupiter, exclaim:
But Jupiter exclaims not.

Marguarette, Queen of Navarre, tells of a young Prince (whom though she does not name, is easily enough, by his great Quality, to be known,) who going upon an amorous Affignation to lye with an Advocate's Wife of Paris, his Way thither being through a Church, he never pass'd that holy Place, going to or returning from this godly Exercise, but he always kneel'd down to pray; in what he would implore the divine Favour, his Soul being full of fuch virtuous Meditations, I leave others to judge; which nevertheless, she instances for a Testimony of singular Devotion. But it is by this Proof only, that a Man may conclude few Men very fit to treat of Theological Affairs. A true Prayer, and religious reconciling of ourourselves to Almighty God, cannot enter into an impure Soul, and at the very Instant subjected to the very Dominion of Satan. He who calls God to his Affistance, whilst in a Habit of Vice, does, as if a Cut-purse should call a Magistrate to help him, or like those who introduce the Name of God to the Attestation of a Lie.

——— Tacito mala vota susurro Concipimus +.

* Perf. Sat. 2. +. Lucan. 1. 5.

In Whifpers we guilty Prayers do make.

There are few Men who durst publish to the World the Prayers they make to Almighty God.

Haud cuivis promptum est, murmurque humilesque susurros Tollere de Templis, & aperto vivere voto *.

> 'Tis not convenient for every one To bring the Pray'r he mutters over there, Out of the Temple to the publick Ear.

And this is the Reason why the Pythagoreans would have them always public, to be heard by every one, to the End they might not prefer indecent or unjust Petitions, as he did, who hearing

> Labra movet metuens audiri; pulchra Laverna, Da mihi fallere, da justum, sanctùmque videri, Noctem peccatis & fraudibus objice nubem ‡.

Apollo's Name pronounc'd aloud for fear
Any his Oraifon's should over-hear, Mutter'd betwixt his Teeth, Lawerna great,
Grant me the Talent to deceive and cheat
All I shall have to do with ev'ry where,
Yet all the while holy and just appear,
And from the Sight of Men be pleas'd to shroud
My Sins with Night, Frauds with a sable Cloud.

The God did severely punish the wicked Prayers of Oedipus, in granting them: He had pray'd that his Children might amongst themselves determine the Succession to his Throne by Arms; and was so miserable, as to see himself taken at his Word. We are not to pray, that all Things may go as we would have them, but as most conducing to the Good of the World; and we are not in our Prayers m

fit

W.

W

mar

vi h pB fp w th to a o

^{*} Perf. Sat. 2. 1 Hor. 1. 1. Epift. 10.

to obey our Wills, but Prudence. We feem in truth, to make use of our Prayers, as a kind of Gibberish, and as those do who employ holy Words about Sorceries and magical Operations: And as if I made account, the Benefit we are to reap from them, depended upon the Contexture, Sound and Gingle of Words, or upon the composing of the Countenance. For having the Soul contaminated with Concupiscence, not touch'd with Repentance, or comforted by any late Reconciliation with Almighty God, we go to present him such Words as the Memory suggests to the Tongue, and hope from thence to retain the Remission of our Sins. There is nothing so easy, so sweet and so favourable, as the divine Law: She calls and invites us to her, guilty and abominable as we are; Extends her Arms, and receives us into her Bosom, as foul and polluted as we at prefent are, and are for the future to be. But then in Return, we are to look upon her with a respective, and a graceful Eye, we are to receive this Pardon with all imaginable Gratitude and Submission, and, for that Instant at least, wherein we address ourselves to her, to have the Soul sensible of the Evils we have committed, and at Defiance with those Passions, that seduc'd her to offend, for neither the Gods, nor good Men (fays Plato) will accept the Present of a wicked Man.

> Immunis aram si tetigit manus, Non sumptuosa blandior hostia Mollivit aversos Penates, Farre pio, & saliente mica*.

The pious Off'ring of a Piece of Bread, If by a pure Hand on the Altar laid, Than coftly Hecatombs, will better please Th' offended Gods, and their just Wrath appease.

* Hor. l. 3. Ode 23.

CHAP.

CHAP. LVII.

Of Age.

or PI my feft was was much as gaa S fed litter

Cannot approve of the Proportion we fettle upon ourfelves, and the Space we allot to the Duration of Life. I fee that the wife contract it very much, in Comparison of the common Opinion. What (faid the younger Cato to those who would stay his Hand from killing himself,) am I now of an Age to be reproach'd, that I go out of the World too foon? And yet he was but eight and forty Years old. He thought that to be a mature and competent Age, confidering how few arrive to it, and fuch as foothing their Thoughts with I know not what Course of Nature, promise to themselves some Years beyond it, could they be privileg'd from the infinite Number of Accidents to which they are by natural Subjection expos'd, might have some Reason to do so. What an idle Conceit it is, to expect to die of a Decay of Strength, which is the last Effects of the extremest Age, and to propose to ourselves no shorter Lease of Life than that, considering it is a kind of Death of all others the most rare, and very hardly feen? We call that only a natural Death, as if it were contrary to Nature, to fee a Man break his Neck with a Fall, be drown'd in Shipwreck, or fnatch'd away with a Pleurify, or the Plague, and, as if our ordinary Condition of Life did not expose us to these Inconveniencies. Let us no more flatter ourselves with these fine sounding Words: We ought rather at a Venture, to call that natural, which is common and universal. To die of old Age, is a Death rare, extraordinary and fingular, and therefore fo much less natural than the others: 'Tis the last and extremest fort of dying: And the more remote, the less to be hop'd for. It is indeed the Boundary of Life, beyond which we are not to pass: Which the Law of Nature has pitch'd for a Limit, not to be exceeded: But to last till then, 18 withal withal a Privilege she is rarely seen to give us. 'Tis a Lease the only figns by particular Favour, and it may be, to one only, in the Space of two or three Ages; and then with a País to boot, to carry him through all the Traverses and Difficulties, the has strewed in the Way of this long Career. And therefore my Opinion is, that when once forty Years old, we should consider it as an Age to which very few arrive: For feeing that Men do not usually proceed fo far, it is a Sign that we are pretty well advanced, and fince we have exceeded the ordinary Bounds, which make the just Measure of Life, we ought not to expect to go much farther; having escaped so many Precipices of Death, whereinto we have feen fo many other Men fall, we should acknowledge, that fo extraordinary a Fortune, as that which has hitherto rescued us from those imminent Perils, and kept us alive beyond the ordinary Term of Living, is not likely to continue long. 'Tis a Fault in our very Laws, to maintain this Error, That a Man is not capable of managing his own Estate 'till he be five and twenty Years old, whereas he will have much ado to manage his Life fo long. Augustus cut off five Years from the ancient Roman Standard, and declared that thirty Years old was fufficient for a Judge. Servius Tullius superseded the Knights of above seven and forty Years of Age, from the Fatigues of War: Augustus dismissed them at forty-five: Though methinks it seems a little unlikely, that Men should be sent to the Fire-side till five and fifty, or fixty Years of Age. I should be of Opinion, that both our Vacancy and Employment should be as far as possible extended for the publick Good: But I find the Fault on the other Side, that they do not employ us early enough. This Emperor was Arbiter of the whole World at nineteen, and yet would have a Man to be thirty, before he could be fit to bear Office in the Commonwealth? For my Part I believe our Souls are adult at twenty, fuch as they are ever like to be, and as capable then as ever. A Soul that has not by that time given evident Earnest of it's Force and Virtue, will never after come to Proof. Natural Parts and Excellencies produce, what they have of vigorous and fine, within that Term or never.

Of all the great human Actions I ever heard, or read of, of what Sort foever, I have observed, both in former Vol. I.

Dd

Ages,

Montaigne's Essays.

394

Ages, and our own, more performed before the Age of thirty, than after: And oft-times in the very Lives of the same Men. May I not confidently instance in those of Hannibal, and his great Competitor Scipio? The better Half of their Lives, they lived upon the Glory they had acquired in their Youth; great Men after, 'tis true, in Comparison of others; but by no Means in Comparison of themselves. As to my own Particular, I do certainly believe, that fince that Age, both my Understanding, and my Constitution, have rather decay'd, than improv'd, and retir'd, rather than advanc'd. 'Tis possible, that with those who make the best Use of their Time, Knowledge and Experience may grow up and increase with their Years; but the Vivacity, Quickness and Steadiness, and other Pieces of us, of much greater Importance, and much more effentially our own, languish and decay,

—Ubi jam validis quassatum est viribus ævi Corpus, & obtusis ceciderunt viribus artus, Claudicat ingenium, delirat linguaque mensque *.

When once the Body's shaken by Time's Rage, The Blood and Vigour ebbing into Age, The Judgment then halts upon either Hip, The Mind does doat, Tongue into Nonsense trip.

Sometimes the Body first submits to Age, sometimes the Soul, and I have seen Men enough who had got a Weakness in their Brains, before either in their Hams or Stomach: And by how much the more, it is a Disease of no great Pain to the insected Party, and of obscure Symptoms, so much greater the Danger is. And for this Reason it is, that I complain of our Laws, not that they keep us too long to our Work, but that they set us to work too late. For the Frailty of Life and the many natural and accidental Rubs to which it is obnoxious and daily exposed: Birth, though noble, ought not to share so large a Vacancy, and so tedious a Course of Education.

* Lucret. l. 3.

The END of the FIRST BOOK.