

The Works Of Horatio Walpole, Earl Of Orford

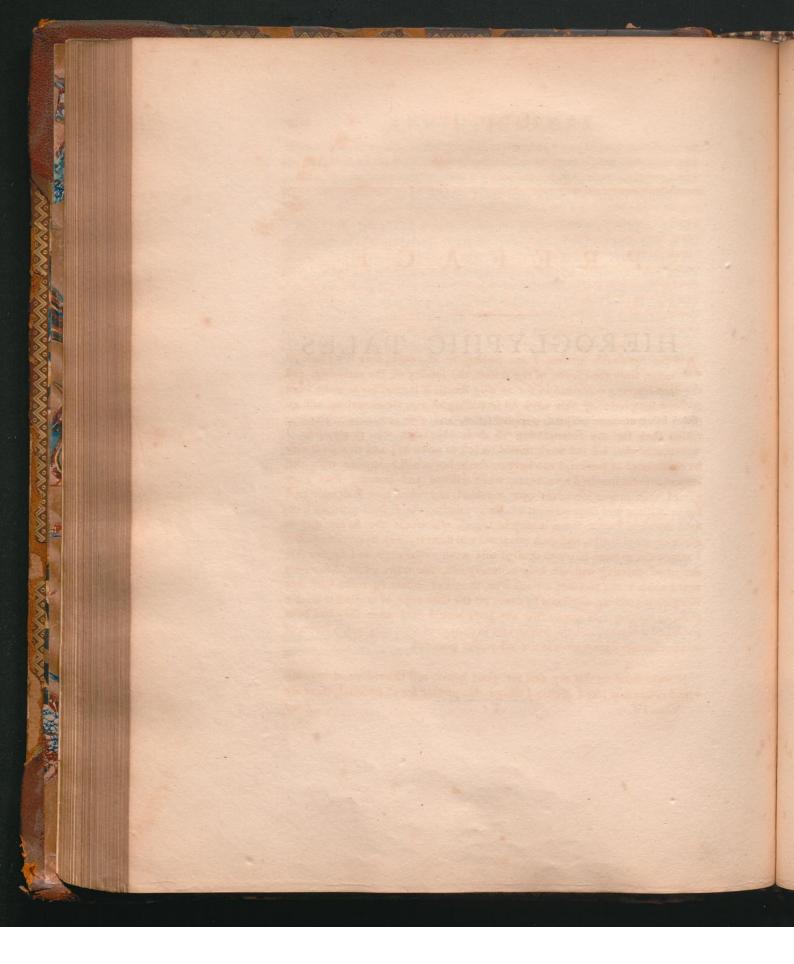

In Five Volumes

Walpole, Horace London, 1798

Hieroglyphic Tales

urn:nbn:de:hbz:466:1-59887

HIEROGLYPHIC TALES Schah Baham ne comprenoit jamais bien que les choses absurdes & hors de toute vraisemblance.

PREFACE.

S the invaluable present I am making to the world may not please all tastes, from the gravity of the matter, the solidity of the reasoning, and the deep learning contained in the enfuing sheets, it is necessary to make some apology for producing this work in fo trifling an age, when nothing will go down but temporary politics, perfonal fatire, and idle romances. The true reason then for my surmounting all these objections was singly this: I was apprehensive left the work should be lost to posterity; and though it may be condemned at prefent, I can have no doubt but it will be treated with due reverence some hundred ages hence, when wisdom and learning shall have gained their proper ascendant over mankind, and when men shall only read for instruction and improvement of their minds. As I shall print an hundred thousand copies, some, it may be hoped, will escape the havoc that is made of moral works, and then this jewel will shine forth in its genuine lustre. I was in the greater hurry to confign this work to the press, as I foresee that the art of printing will ere long be totally loft, like other useful discoveries well known to the ancients. Such were the art of diffolving rocks with hot vinegar, of teaching elephants to dance on the flack rope, of making malleable glass, of writing epic poems that any body would read after they had been published a month, and the stupendous invention of new religions, a secret of which illiterate Mahomet was the last person possessed.

Notwithstanding this my zeal for good letters, and the ardour of my universal citizenship (for I declare I design this present for all nations), there are Vol. IV.

fome small difficulties in the way, that prevent my conferring this my great benefaction on the world completely and all at once. I am obliged to produce it in small portions, and therefore beg the prayers of all good and wife men that my life may be prolonged to me, till I shall be able to publish the whole work, no man elfe being capable of executing the charge fo well as myself, for reasons that my modesty will not permit me to specify. In the mean time, as it is the duty of an editor to acquaint the world with what relates to himself as well as his author, I think it right to mention the causes that compel me to publish this work in numbers. The common reason of such proceeding is to make a book dearer for the ease of the purchasers, it being fupposed that most people had rather give twenty shillings by sixpence a fortnight, than pay ten shillings once for all. Public-spirited as this proceeding is, I must confess my reasons are more and merely personal. As my circumflances are very moderate, and barely fufficient to maintain decently a gentleman of my abilities and learning, I cannot afford to print at once an hundred thousand copies of two volumes in folio, for that will be the whole mass of Hieroglyphic Tales when the work is perfected. In the next place, being very asthmatic, and requiring a free communication of air, I lodge in the uppermost story of a house in an alley not far from St. Mary Axe; and as a great deal of good company lodges in the fame manfion, it was by a confiderable favour that I could obtain a fingle chamber to myfelf; which chamber is by no means large enough to contain the whole impression, for I design to vend the copies myself, and, according to the practice of other great men, shall fign the first sheet myself with my own hand.

Defirous as I am of acquainting the world with many more circumstances relative to myself, some private considerations prevent my indulging their curiosity any farther at present; but I shall take care to leave so minute an account of myself to some public library, that the future commentators and editors of this work shall not be deprived of all necessary lights. In the mean time I beg the reader to accept the temporary compensation of an account of the author whose work I am publishing.

The Hieroglyphic Tales were undoubtedly written a little before the creation of the world, and have ever fince been preferved, by oral tradition, in the mountains of Crampcraggiri, an uninhabited island, not yet discovered. Of these few facts we could have the most authentic attestations of several clergymen, who remember to have heard them repeated by old men long before they, the faid clergymen, were born. We do not trouble the reader with these attestations, as we are sure every body will believe them as much as if they had feen them. It is more difficult to afcertain the true author. We might ascribe them with great probability to Kemanrlegorpikos, fon of Quat; but besides that we are not certain that any such person ever existed, it is not clear that he ever wrote any thing but a book of cookery, and that in heroic verse. Others give them to Quat's nurse, and a few to Hermes Trismegistus, though there is a passage in the latter's treatise on the harpsichord which directly contradicts the account of the first volcano in the 114th of the Hieroglyphic Tales. As Trifmegiftus's work is loft, it is impossible to decide now, whether the discordance mentioned is so positive as has been afferted by many learned men, who only guess at the opinion of Hermes from other passages in his writings, and who indeed are not fure whether he was speaking of volcanos or cheefecakes; for he drew fo ill, that his hieroglyphics may often be taken for the most opposite things in nature; and as there is no subject which he has not treated, it is not precifely known what he was discussing in any one of them.

3

men.

This is the nearest we can come to any certainty with regard to the author. But whether he wrote the Tales fix thousand years ago, as we believe, or whether they were written for him within these ten years, they are incontestably the most ancient work in the world; and though there is little imagination, and still less invention in them, yet there are so many passages in them exactly refembling Homer, that any man living would conclude they were imitated from that great poet, if it was not certain that Homer borrowed from them, which I shall prove two ways: first, by giving Homer's parallel passages at the bottom of the page; and fecondly, by translating Homer himself into profe, which shall make him so unlike himself, that nobody will think he could be an original writer: and when he is become totally lifeless and insipid, it will be impossible but these Tales should be preferred to the Iliad; especially as I defign to put them into a kind of ftyle that shall be neither verse nor prose; a diction lately much used in tragedies and heroic poems, the former of which are really heroic poems from want of probability, as an antico-moderno epic poem is in fact a mere tragedy, having little or no change of scene, no incidents but a ghost and a storm, and no events but the deaths of the principal actors.

Tt 2

I will

I will not detain the reader longer from the perufal of this invaluable work; but I must be eech the public to be expeditious in taking off the whole impresfion, as fast as I can get it printed; because I must inform them that I have a more precious work in contemplation; namely, a new Roman history, in which I mean to ridicule, detect and expose all ancient virtue and patriotism, and show from original papers which I am going to write, and which I shall afterwards bury in the ruins of Carthage and then dig up, that it appears by the letters of Hanno the Punic embaffador at Rome, that Scipio was in the pay of Hannibal, and that the dilatoriness of Fabius proceeded from his being a pensioner of the same general. I own this discovery will pierce my heart; but as morality is best taught by showing how little effect it had on the best of men, I will facrifice the most virtuous names for the instruction of the prefent wicked generation; and I cannot doubt but when once they have learnt to detest the favourite heroes of antiquity, they will become good subjects of the most pious king that ever lived fince David, who expelled the established royal family, and then fung pfalms to the memory of Jonathan, to whose prejudice he had fucceeded to the throne.

HIEROGLYPHIC

HIEROGLYPHIC TALES.

TALE I.

A new Arabian Night's Entertainment.

AT the foot of the great mountain Hirgonquu was anciently fituated the kingdom of Larbidel. Geographers, who are not apt to make fuch just comparisons, said it resembled a football just going to be kicked away: and so it happened; for the mountain kicked the kingdom into the ocean, and it has never been heard of since.

One day a young princess had climbed up to the top of the mountain to gather goat's eggs, the whites of which are excellent for taking off freckles.—Goat's eggs!—Yes—naturalists hold that all beings are conceived in an egg. The goats of Hirgonquu might be oviparous, and lay their eggs to be hatched by the sun. This is my supposition; no matter whether I believe it myself or not. I will write against and abuse any man that opposes my hypothesis. It would be fine indeed if learned men were obliged to believe what they affert.

The other fide of the mountain was inhabited by a nation of whom the Larbidellians knew no more than the French nobility do of Great Britain, which which they think is an island that some how or other may be approached by land. The princess had strayed into the consines of Cucurucu, when she suddenly found herself seized by the guards of the prince that reigned in that country. They told her in few words that she must be conveyed to the capital, and married to the giant their lord and emperor. The giant, it seems, was fond of having a new wife every night, who was to tell him a story that would last till morning, and then have her head cut off—Such odd ways have some folks of passing their wedding-nights! The princess modestly asked, why their master loved such long stories? The captain of the guard replied, his majesty did not sleep well.—Well! said she, and if he does not?—Not but I believe I can tell as long stories as any princess in Asia. Nay, I can repeat Leonidas by heart; and your emperor must be wakeful indeed if he can hold out against that.

By this time they were arrived at the palace. To the great surprise of the princess, the emperor, so far from being a giant, was but five feet one inch in height; but being two inches taller than any of his predecessors, the flattery of his courtiers had bestowed the name of giant on him; and he affected to look down upon any man above his own stature. The princess was immediately undressed and put to bed, his majesty being impatient to hear a new story.

Light of my eyes, faid the emperor, what is your name? I call myfelf the princess Gronovia, replied she; but my real appellation is the frow Gronow. And what is the use of a name, said his majesty, but to be called by it? And why do you pretend to be a princess, if you are not? My turn is romantic, answered she, and I have ever had an ambition of being the heroine of a novel. Now there are but two conditions that entitle one to that rank; one must be a shepherdess or a princess. Well, content yourself, said the giant; you will die an empress, without being either the one or the other! But what sublime reason had you for lengthening your name so unaccountably? It is a custom in my family, said she: all my ancestors were learned men, who wrote about the Romans. It sounded more classic, and gave a higher opinion of their literature, to put a Latin termination to their names. All this is Japonese to me, said the emperor; but your ancestors seem to have been a parcel of mountebanks. Does one understand any thing the better for corrupting one's name? Oh, said the princess, but it showed taste too. There was a time when in Italy the learned carried this still farther; and a man with a large forehead, who was born on the fifth of January, called himself Quintus Januarius Fronto. More and more absurd, said the emperor. You seem to have a great deal of impertinent knowledge about a great many impertinent people; but proceed in your story: whence came you? Mynheer, said she, I was born in Holland—The deuce you was? said the emperor, and where is that? It was no where, replied the princess spritelily, till my countrymen gained it from the sea.—Indeed, moppet! said his majesty; and pray who were your countrymen, before you had any country? Your majesty asks a very shrewd question, said she, which I cannot resolve on a sudden; but I will step home to my library, and consult sive or six thousand volumes of modern history, an hundred or two dictionaries, and an abridgement of geography in forty volumes in solio, and be back in an instant. Not so fast, my life, said the emperor, you must not rise till you go to execution: it is now one in the morning, and you have not begun your story.

My great grandfather, continued the princes, was a Dutch merchant, who passed many years in Japan—On what account? faid the emperor. He went thither to abjure his religion, said she, that he might get money enough to return and defend it against Philip II. You are a pleasant family, said the emperor; but though I love sables, I hate genealogies. I know in all samilies, by their own account, there never was any thing but good and great men from father to son; a sort of siction that does not at all amuse me. In my dominions there is no nobility but slattery. Whoever slatters me best is created a great lord, and the titles I confer are synonymous to their merits. There is Kiss-my-breech-Can, my favourite; Adulation-Can, lord treasurer; Prerogative-Can, head of the law; and Blasphemy-Can, high-priest. Whoever speaks truth corrupts his blood, and is ipso saccounted. In Europe you allow a man to be noble because one of his ancestors was a flatterer. But every thing degenerates, the farther it is removed from its source. I will not hear a word of any of your race before your sather: what was he?

It was in the height of the contests about the bull Unigenitus—I tell you, interrupted the emperor, I will not be plagued with any more of those people with Latin names: they were a parcel of coxcombs, and seem to have infected you with their folly. I am forry, replied Gronovia, that your sublime highness is so little acquainted with the state of Europe, as to take a papal ordinance dinance for a person. Unigenitus is Latin for the Jesuits-And who the devil are the Jesuits? said the giant. You explain one nonfensical term by another, and wonder I am never the wifer. Sir, faid the princefs, if you will permit me to give you a short account of the troubles that have agitated Europe for these last two hundred years, on the doctrines of grace, free-will, predestination, reprobation, justification, &c. you will be more entertained, and will believe less, than if I told your majesty a long story of fairies and goblins. You are an eternal prater, faid the emperor, and very felf-fufficient; but talk your fill, and upon what subject you like, till to-morrow morning: but I fwear by the foul of the holy Jirigi, who rode to heaven on the tail of a magpie, as foon as the clock strikes eight, you are a dead woman. Well, who was the Jesuit Unigenitus?

The novel doctrines that had fprung up in Germany, faid Gronovia, made it necessary for the church to look about her. The disciples of Loyola-Of whom? faid the emperor, yawning-Ignatius Loyola, the founder of the Jefuits, replied Gronovia, was-A writer of Roman history, I suppose, interrupted the emperor: what the devil were the Romans to you, that you trouble your head fo much about them? The empire of Rome and the church of Rome are two distinct things, said the princess; and yet, as one may say, the one depends upon the other, as the new testament does on the old. One destroyed the other, and yet pretends a right to its inheritance. The temporalities of the church—What's o'clock, faid the emperor to the chief eunuch? It cannot fure be far from eight—This woman has goffiped at least feven hours. Do you hear, my to-morrow night's wife shall be dumb-Cut her tongue out before you bring her to our bed. Madam, faid the eunuch, his fublime highnefs. whose erudition passes the fands of the sea, is too well acquainted with all human sciences to require information. It is therefore that his exalted wisdom prefers accounts of what never happened, to any relation either in history or divinity -You lie, faid the emperor; when I exclude truth, I certainly do not mean to forbid divinity-How many divinities have you in Europe, woman? The council of Trent, replied Gronovia, has decided-The emperor began to fnore-I mean, continued Gronovia, that notwithstanding all father Paul has afferted, cardinal Palavicini affirms that in the three first seffions of that council-The emperor was now fast asleep; which the princess and the chief eunuch perceiving, clapped feveral pillows upon his face, and held them there till he expired. As foon as they were convinced he was dead, the princess, putting on every mark of despair and concern, issued to the divan, where she was immediately proclaimed empress. The emperor, it was given out, had died of an hemorrhoidal colic; but to show her regard for his memory, her imperial majesty declared she would strictly adhere to the maxims by which he had governed. Accordingly she espoused a new husband every night, but dispensed with their telling her stories, and was graciously pleased also, upon their good behaviour, to remit the subsequent execution. She sent presents to all the learned men in Asia; and they in return did not fail to cry her up as a pattern of clemency, wisdom, and virtue: and though the panegyrics of the learned are generally as clumsy as they are fulsome, they ventured to assure her that their writings would be as durable as brass, and that the memory of her glorious reign would reach to the latest posterity.

HIEROGLYPHIC TALES.

329

VOL. IV.

Uu

TALE

TALE II.

The King and his three Daughters.

THERE was formerly a king, who had three daughters—that is, he would have had three, if he had had one more—but fome how or other the eldest never was born. She was extremely handsome, had a great deal of wit, and spoke French in perfection, as all the authors of that age affirm, and yet none of them pretend that she ever existed. It is very certain that the two other princesses were far from beauties; the second had a strong Yorkshire dialect, and the youngest had bad teeth and but one leg, which occasioned her dancing very ill.

As it was not probable that his majesty would have any more children, being eighty-feven years two months and thirteen days old when his queen died, the states of the kingdom were very anxious to have the princesses married. But there was one great obstacle to this settlement, though so important to the peace of the kingdom. The king infifted that his eldeft daughter should be married first; and as there was no such person, it was very difficult to fix upon a proper husband for her. The courtiers all approved his majesty's refolution; but, as under the best princes there will always be a number of difcontented, the nation was torn into different factions, the grumblers or patriots infifting that the fecond princess was the eldest, and ought to be declared heiress apparent to the crown. Many pamphlets were written pro and con; but the ministerial party pretended that the chancellor's argument was unanfwerable, who affirmed, that the fecond princess could not be the eldest, as no princess-royal ever had a Yorkshire accent. A few persons who were attached to the youngest princess took advantage of this plea for whispering that her royal highness's pretensions to the crown were the best of all; for, as there was no eldest princess, and as the second must be the first if there was no first, and as she could not be the second if she was the first, and as the chancellor cellor had proved that she could not be the first, it followed plainly by every idea of law that she could be nobody at all; and then the consequence followed of course, that the youngest must be the eldest, if she had no elder fister.

It is inconceivable what animolities and mischiefs arose from these different titles; and each faction endeavoured to strengthen itself by foreign alliances. The court party, having no real object for their attachment, were the most attached of all, and made up by warmth for the want of soundation in their principles. The clergy in general were devoted to this, which was styled the first party. The physicians embraced the second; and the lawyers declared for the third, or the faction of the youngest princess, because it seemed best calculated to admit of doubts and endless litigation.

While the nation was in this diffracted fituation, there arrived the prince of Quifferiquimini, who would have been the most accomplished hero of the age, if he had not been dead, and had spoken any language but the Egyptian, and had not had three legs. Notwithstanding these blemishes, the eyes of the whole nation were immediately turned upon him, and each party wished to see him married to the princess whose cause they espoused.

The old king received him with the most distinguished honours; the senate made the most fulsome addresses to him; the princesses were so taken with him, that they grew more bitter enemies than ever; and the court ladies and petit-maîtres invented a thousand new fashions upon his account—Every thing was to be à la Quisseriquimini. Both men and women of fashion lest off rouge, to look the more cadaverous; their clothes were embroidered with hieroglyphics, and all the ugly characters they could gather from Egyptian antiquities, with which they were forced to be contented, it being impossible to learn a language that is lost; and all tables, chairs, stools, cabinets and couches were made with only three legs: the last, however, soon went out of fashion, as being very inconvenient.

The prince, who, ever fince his death, had had but a weakly conflitution, was a little fatigued with this excess of attentions, and would often wish himfelf at home in his cossin. But his greatest difficulty of all was to get rid of the youngest princess, who kept hopping after him wherever he went, and U u 2 was fo full of admiration of his three legs, and fo modest about having but one herfelf, and so inquisitive to know how his three legs were set on, that, being the best-natured man in the world, it went to his heart whenever in a fit of peevishness he happened to drop an impatient word, which never failed to throw her into an agony of tears; and then she looked so ugly that it was impossible for him to be tolerably civil to her. He was not much more inclined to the fecond princefs-In truth, it was the eldeft who made the conquest of his affections: and so violently did his passion increase one Tuesday morning, that, breaking through all prudential confiderations (for there were many reasons which ought to have determined his choice in favour of either of the other fifters), he hurried to the old king, acquainted him with his love, and demanded the eldest princess in marriage. Nothing could equal the joy of the good old monarch, who withed for nothing but to live to fee the confummation of this match. Throwing his arms about the prince skeleton's neck, and watering his hollow cheeks with warm tears, he granted his request, and added, that he would immediately refign his crown to him and his favourite daughter.

I am forced for want of room to pass over many circumstances that would add greatly to the beauty of this history, and am forry I must dash the seader's impatience by acquainting him, that notwithstanding the eagerness of the old king and youthful ardour of the prince, the nuptials were obliged to be postponed; the archbishop declaring that it was essentially necessary to have a dispensation from the pope, the parties being related within the forbidden degrees; a woman that never was, and a man that had been, being deemed first cousins in the eye of the canon law.

Hence arose a new difficulty. The religion of the Quifferiquiminians was totally opposite to that of the papils. The former believed in nothing but grace; and they had a high-priest of their own, who pretended that he was master of the whole see-simple of grace, and by that possession could cause every thing to have been that never had been, and could prevent every thing that had been from ever having been. "We have nothing to do," said the prince to the king, "but to send a solemn embassy to the high-priest of grace, with a present of a hundred thousand million of ingots, and he will cause your charming no-daughter to have been, and will prevent my having died, and then there will be no occasion for a dispensation from your old fool at Rome."

How!

-How! thou impious, atheistical bag of drybones, cried the old king; dost thou profane our holy religion? Thou shalt have no daughter of mine, thou three-legged skeleton-Go and be buried and be damned, as thou must be; for, as thou art dead, thou art past repentance: I would sooner give my child to a baboon, who has one leg more than thou hast, than bestow her on fuch a reprobate corpfe.—You had better give your one-legged infanta to the baboon, faid the prince; they are fitter for one another. As much a corpfe as I am, I am preferable to nobody; and who the devil would have married your no-daughter, but a dead body? For my religion, I lived and died in it, and it is not in my power to change it now if I would .- But for your part - A great shout interrupted this dialogue; and the captain of the guard, rushing into the royal closet, acquainted his majesty, that the second princess, in revenge of the prince's neglect, had given her hand to a dryfalter, who was a common-councilman; and that the city, in confideration of the match, had proclaimed them king and queen, allowing his majesty to retain the title for his life, which they had fixed for the term of fix months; and ordering, in respect of his royal birth, that the prince should immediately lie in state and have a pompous funeral.

This revolution was fo fudden and fo universal, that all parties approved, or were forced to seem to approve it. The old king died the next day, as the courtiers said, for joy; the prince of Quifferiquimini was buried in spite of his appeal to the law of nations; and the youngest princess went distracted, and was shut up in a madhouse, calling out day and night for a husband with three legs.

TALE III.

The Dice Box: A Fairy Tale.

Translated from the French Translation of the Countess Daunois, for the Entertainment of Miss Caroline Campbelli.

HERE was a merchant of Damascus named Aboulcasem, who had an only daughter called Piffimiffi, which fignifies the waters of Jordan; because a fairy foretold at her birth that she would be one of Solomon's concubines. Azaziel, the angel of death, having transported Aboulcasem to the regions of bliss, he had no fortune to bequeath to his beloved child but the shell of a pistachia-nut drawn by an elephant and a ladybird. Pissimissi, who was but nine years old, and who had been kept in great confinement, was impatient to see the world; and no sooner was the breath out of her father's body, than she got into the car, and, whipping her elephant and ladybird, drove out of the yard as fast as possible, without knowing whither she was going. Her coursers never stopped till they came to the foot of a brazen tower, that had neither doors nor windows, in which lived an old enchantrefs, who had locked herfelf up there with seventeen thousand husbands. It had but one fingle vent for air, which was a fmall chimney grated over, through which it was fcarce possible to put one's hand. Pissimissi, who was very impatient, ordered her courfers to fly with her up to the top of the chimney; which, as they were the most docile creatures in the world, they immediately did: but unluckily the fore paw of the elephant lighting on the top of the chimney, broke down the grate by its weight, but at the same time stopped up the pasfage fo entirely, that all the enchantress's husbands were stifled for want of air. As it was a collection she had made with great care and cost, it is easy to imagine her vexation and rage. She raifed a storm of thunder and lightning that lasted eight hundred and four years; and having conjured up an army of two thousand devils, she ordered them to flay the elephant alive, and dress it for her supper with anchovy sauce. Nothing could have saved the poor beast, if, struggling to get loose from the chimney, he had not happily broken wind, which it feems is a great prefervative against devils. They all flew a thousand ways, and in their hurry carried away half the brazen tower; by which means the elephant, the car, the ladybird, and Piffimiffi got loofe; but in their fall tumbled through the roof of an apothecary's shop, and broke all his bottles of physic. The elephant, who was very dry with his fatigue, and who had not much taste, immediately sucked up all the medicines with his probofcis; which occasioned such a variety of effects in his bowels, that it was well he had fuch a strong constitution, or he must have died of it. His evacuations were fo plentiful, that he not only drowned the tower of Babel, near which the apothecary's shop stood, but the current ran fourscore leagues till it came to the sea, and there poisoned so many whales and leviathans, that a pestilence enfued, and lasted three years nine months and fixteen days. As the elephant was extremely weakened by what had happened, it was impossible for him to draw the car for eighteen months; which was a cruel delay to Piffimissi's impatience, who during all that time could not travel above a hundred miles a day; for, as she carried the fick animal in her lap, the poor ladybird could not make longer stages with no affistance. Besides, Pissimissi bought every thing she faw wherever she came; and all was crowded into the car, and ftuffed into the feat. She had purchased ninety-two dolls, seventeen baby-houses, fix cart-loads of sugar-plums, a thousand ells of gingerbread, eight dancing dogs, a bear and a monkey, four toyshops with all their contents, and feven dozen of bibs and aprons of the newest fashion. They were jogging on with all this cargo over mount Caucafus, when an immenfe humming-bird, who had been ftruck with the beauty of the ladybird's wings, that I had forgot to fay were of ruby spotted with black pearls, fouring down at once upon her prey, swallowed ladybird, Pissimissi, the elephant, and all their commodities. It happened that the humming-bird belonged to Solomon; he let it out of its cage every morning after breakfast, and it constantly came home by the time the council broke up. Nothing could equal the furprise of his majesty and the courtiers, when the dear little creature arrived, with the elephant's probofcis hanging out of its divine little bill. However, after the first astonishment was over, his majesty, who to be sure was wisdom itself, and who understood natural philosophy that it was a charm to hear him discourse of those matters, and who was actually making a collection of dried beafts and birds in twelve thousand volumes of the best fool's-cap paper, immediately perceived what had happened; and taking out of the fide-pocket of his breeches a diamond toothpick-case of his own turning, with the toothpick made of the only unicorn's horn he ever faw, he stuck it into the elephant's snout, and began to draw it out: but all his philosophy was confounded, when jammed between the elephant's legs he perceived the head of a beautiful girl, and between her legs a baby-house, which with the wings extended thirty feet, out of the windows of which rained a torrent of fugar-plums, that had been placed there to make room. 'Then followed the bear, who had been pressed to the bales of gingerbread and was covered all over with it, and looked but uncouthly; and the monkey with a doll in every paw, and his pouches fo crammed with fugar-plums that they hung on each fide of him, and trailed on the ground behind like the duchefs of  beautiful breafts. Solomon, however, gave fmall attention to this proceffion, being caught with the charms of the lovely Piffimiffi: he immediately began the fong of fongs extempore; and what he had feen-I mean, all that came out of the humming-bird's throathad made fuch a jumble in his ideas, that there was nothing fo unlike to which he did not compare all Pissimissi's beauties. As he sung his canticles too to no tune, and God knows had but a bad voice, they were far from comforting Piffimiffi: the elephant had torn her best bib and apron, and she cried and roared, and kept fuch a fqualling, that, though Solomon carried her in his arms and showed her all the fine things in the temple, there was no pacifying her. The queen of Sheba, who was playing at backgammon with the high-prieft, and who came every October to converse with Solomon, though she did not understand a word of Hebrew, hearing the noise, came running out of her dreffing-room; and feeing the king with a fqualling child in his arms, afked him peevishly, if it became his reputed wisdom to expose himself with his baftards to all the court? Solomon, instead of replying, began finging; which fo provoked the Sheban princefs, that, happening to have one of the dice-boxes in her hand, she without any ceremony threw it at his head. The enchantress, whom I mentioned before, and who, though invisible, had followed Piffimiffi, and drawn her into her train of misfortunes, turned the dice-box aside, and directed it to Pissimissi's nose; which being something slat, like madame de s, it stuck there, and being of ivory, Solomon ever after compared his beloved's nose to the tower that leads to Damascus. The queen, though ashamed of her behaviour, was not in her heart forry for the accident; but when she found that it only increased the monarch's passion, her contempt redoubled; and calling him a thousand old fools to herself, she ordered her postchaise and drove away in a fury, without leaving sixpence for the servants; and nobody knows what became of her or her kingdom, which has never been heard of since.

Eldest daughter of lord William Campbell. She lived with her aunt the countess of Ailesbury.

HIEROGLYPHIC TALES.

IFLEV Sendon May Giella Phy drulg *, king of Kilkenny, the thouland and fifty-feventh detecndent in a direct line from Miletins king of Spain, and only desighter called Creat K, and by correspond Grant; who belog arrived at years of chiraction, and perfectly inflated by her royal parents in he arts of governments, the total moment determined or retign his coveration.

and you exerce configure to her. The content wate residy to filler the new passes with passes rais and address to member the resident the religion with passes rais and address to member the religion of the chart he bestered about a to and to many distribute of come and imperior of the chart in the policy of the

it was not reval preduce to play at blinderan shift, but such a butlend artist from the, tenderal punishing, and medical sque exing and punishing one another, to endeavour to be the fact blinded, they are the founds her contains

Vol. IV.

Xx

TALE

337

T A L E IV. produced reven and

The Peach in Brandy. A Milefian Tale.

FITZ Scanlan Mac Giolla l'ha druig ', king of Kilkenny, the thousand and fifty-seventh descendant in a direct line from Milesius king of Spain, had an only daughter called Great A, and by corruption Grata; who being arrived at years of discretion, and perfectly initiated by her royal parents in the arts of government, the fond monarch determined to resign his crown to her: having accordingly assembled the senate, he declared his resolution to them, and having delivered his sceptre into the princess's hand, he obliged her to ascend the throne; and, to set the example, was the first to kiss her hand, and vow eternal obedience to her. The senators were ready to stifle the new queen with panegyrics and addresses; the people, though they adored the old king, were transported with having a new sovereign; and the university, according to custom immemorial, presented her majesty, three months after every body had forgotten the event, with testimonials of the excessive sorrow and excessive joy they selt on losing one monarch and getting another.

Her majesty was now in the fifth year of her age, and a prodigy of sense and goodness. In her first speech to the senate, which she lisped with inimitable grace, she assured them that her heart was entirely Irish, and that she did not intend any longer to go in leading-strings; as a proof of which she immediately declared her nurse prime-minister. The senate applauded this sage choice with even greater encomiums than the last, and voted a free gift to the queen of a million of sugar-plums, and to the savourite of twenty thousand bottles of usquebaugh. Her majesty then jumping from her throne, declared it was her royal pleasure to play at blindman's-buff; but such a hub-bub arose from the senators' pushing, and pressing, and squeezing, and punching one another, to endeavour to be the first blinded, that in the scusse her majesty was thrown down, and got a bump on her forehead as big as a pigeon's egg, which fet her a-fqualling, that you might have heard her to Tipperary. The old king flew into a rage, and fnatching up the mace knocked out the chancellor's brains, who at that time happened not to have any; and the queenmother, who fat in a tribune above to fee the ceremony, fell into a fit and miscarried of twins, who were killed by her majesty's fright; but the earl of Bullaboo, great butler of the crown, happening to stand next to the queen, catched up one of the dead children, and, perceiving it was a boy, ran down to the king and wished him joy of the birth of a son and heir. The king, who had now recovered his fweet temper, called him a fool and blunderer; upon which Mr. Phelim O'Torture, a zealous courtier, flarted up with great presence of mind and accused the earl of Bullaboo of high treason, for having afferted that his late majefty had had any other heir than their prefent most lawful and most religious fovereign queen Grata. An impeachment was voted by a large majority, though not without warm opposition, particularly from a celebrated Kilkennian orator, whose name is unfortunately not come down to us, it being erased out of the journals afterwards, as the Irish author whom I copy says, when he became first lord of the treasury, as he was during the whole reign of queen Grata's successor. The argument of this Mr. Killmorackill, says my author, whose name is lost, was, that her majesty the queen-mother having conceived a fon before the king's refignation, that fon was indubitably heir to the crown, and confequently the refignation void, it not fignifying an iota whether the child was born alive or dead: it was alive, faid he, when it was conceived-Here he was called to order by Dr. O'Flaharty, the queenmother's man-midwife and member for the borough of Corbelly, who entered into a learned differtation on embryos; but he was interrupted by the young queen's crying for her fupper, the previous question for which was carried without a negative; and then the house being refumed, the debate was cut short by the impatience of the majority to go and drink her majesty's health. This feeming violence gave occasion to a very long protest, drawn up by fir Archee Mac Sarcaim, in which he contrived to state the claim of the departed feetus fo artfully, that it produced a civil war, and gave rife to those bloody ravages and maffacres which fo long laid waste the ancient kingdom of Kilkenny, and which were at last terminated by a lucky accident, well known, fays my author, to every body, but which he thinks it his duty to relate for the fake of those who never may have heard it. These are his words:

was

It

340 HIEROGLYPHIC TALES.

It happened that the archbishop of Tuum (anciently called Meum by the Roman catholic clergy), the great wit of those times, was in the queenmother's closet, who had the young queen in her lap 3. His grace was fuddenly feized with a violent fit of the cholic, which made him make fuch wry faces, that the queen-mother thought he was going to die, and ran out of the room to fend for a physician, for she was a pattern of goodness, and void of pride. While she was stepped into the fervants' hall to call somebody, according to the simplicity of those times, the archbishop's pains increased, when perceiving fomething on the mantle-piece, which he took for a peach in brandy, he gulped it all down at once without faying grace, God forgive him! and found great comfort from it. He had not done licking his lips before the queen-mother returned, when queen Grata cried out, "Mama, mama, the gentleman has eat my little brother!" This fortunate event put an end to the contest, the male line entirely failing in the person of the devoured prince. The archbishop, however, who became pope by the name of Innocent the third, having afterwards a fon by his fifter, named the child Fitzpatrick, as having fome of the royal blood in its veins; and from him are defcended all the younger branches of the Fitzpatricks of our time. Now the rest of the acts of Grata, and all that she did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Kilkenny?

NOTES

NOTES ON TALE IV.

- * Vide Lodge's Peerage of Ireland, in the Family of Fitzpatrick.
- 2 Queen Anne in her first speech to the parliament said, her heart was entirely English.
- ³ Some commentators have ignorantly supposed that the Irish author is guilty of a great anachronism in this passage; for having said that the contested succession occasioned long wars, he yet speaks of queen Grata, at the conclusion of them, as still sitting in her mother's lap as a child. Now I can confute them from their own state of the question. Like a child, does not import that the actually was a child: she only sat like a child; and so she might though thirty years old. Civilians have declared at what period of his life a king may be of age before he is: but neither Grotius nor Pussendorste, nor any of the tribe, have determined how long a king or queen may remain infants after they are past their infancy.

TALE

TALE V.

MI LI. A Chinese Fairy Tale.

MI LI, prince of China, was brought up by his godmother the fairy Hih, who was famous for telling fortunes with a tea-cup. From that unerring oracle she affured him, that he would be the most unhappy man alive unless he married a princess whose name was the same with her father's dominions. As in all probability there could not be above one person in the world to whom that accident had happened, the prince thought there would be nothing so easy as to learn who his destined bride was. He had been too well educated to put the question to his godmother, for he knew when she uttered an oracle, that it was with intention to perplex, not to inform; which has made people fo fond of confulting all those who do not give an explicit answer, such as prophets, lawyers, and any body you meet on the road, who, if you ask the way, reply by desiring to know whence you came. Mi Li was no fooner returned to his palace than he fent for his governor, who was deaf and dumb, qualities for which the fairy had felected him, that he might not instil any bad principles into his pupil; however, in recompence, he could talk upon his fingers like an angel. Mi Li asked him directly who the princess was whose name was the same with her father's kingdom? This was a little exaggeration in the prince, but nobody ever repeats any thing just as they heard it: besides, it was excusable in the heir of a great monarchy, who of all things had not been taught to speak truth, and perhaps had never heard what it was. Still it was not the mistake of kingdom for dominions that puzzled the governor. It never helped him to understand any thing the better for its being rightly stated. However, as he had great presence of mind, which confifted in never giving a direct answer, and in looking as if he could, he replied, it was a question of too great importance to be resolved on a sudden. How came you to know that? faid the prince.—This youthful impetuofity told the governor that there was fomething more in the question than he had apprehended; and though he could be very folemn about nothing, he was ten times more fo when there was fomething he did not comprehend. Yet that unknown fomething occasioning a conflict between his cunning and his ignorance, and the latter being the greater, always betrayed itself, for nothing looks fo filly as a fool acting wisdom. The prince repeated his queftion; the governor demanded why he asked-the prince had not patience to spell the question over again on his fingers, but bawled it as loud as he could, to no purpose. The courtiers ran in, and catching up the prince's words, and repeating them imperfectly, it foon flew all over Pekin, and thence into the provinces, and thence into Tartary, and thence to Mufcovy, and fo on, that the prince wanted to know who the princess was, whose name was the fame as her father's. As the Chinese have not the bleffing (for aught I know) of having family furnames as we have, and as what would be their christiannames, if they were so happy as to be christians, are quite different for men and women, the Chinese, who think that must be a rule all over the world because it is theirs, decided that there could not exist upon the square face of the earth a woman whose name was the same as her father's. They repeated this fo often, and with fo much deference and fo much obstinacy, that the prince, totally forgetting the original oracle, believed that he wanted to know who the woman was who had the fame name as her father. However, remembering there was fomething in the question that he had taken for royal, he always faid the king her father. The prime minister consulted the red book or court-calendar, which was bis oracle, and could find no fuch princefs. All the ministers at foreign courts were instructed to inform themselves if there was any fuch lady; but as it took up a great deal of time to put these instructions into cypher, the prince's impatience could not wait for the couriers fetting out, but he determined to go himself in search of the princess. The old king, who, as is ufual, had left the whole management of affairs to his fon the moment he was fourteen, was charmed with the prince's resolution of seeing the world, which he thought could be done in a few days, the facility of which makes fo many monarchs never stir out of their own palaces till it is too late; and his majesty declared, that he should approve of his son's choice, be the lady who she would, provided she answered to the divine designation of having the fame name as her father.

The prince rode post to Canton, intending to embark there on board an English man of war. With what infinite transport did he hear the evening before fore he was to embark, that a failor knew the identic lady in question. The prince fealded his mouth with the tea he was drinking, broke the old china cup it was in, and which the queen his mother had given him at his departure from Pekin, and which had been given to her great great great great grandmother queen Fi by Confucius himfelf, and ran down to the veffel and afked for the man who knew his bride. It was honest Tom O'Bull, an Irish failor, who by his interpreter Mr. James Hall, the supercargo, informed his highness that Mr. Bob Oliver of Sligo had a daughter christened of both his names, the fair miss Bob Oliver 1. The prince by the plenitude of his power declared Tom a mandarin of the first class, and at Tom's desire promised to speak to his brother the king of Great Ireland, France and Britain, to have him made a peer in his own country, Tom faying he should be ashamed to appear there without being a lord as well as all his acquaintance.

The prince's passion, which was greatly inflamed by Tom's description of her highness Bob's charms, would not let him stay for a proper set of ladies from Pekin to carry to wait on his bride, fo he took a dozen of the wives of the first merchants in Canton, and two dozen virgins as maids of honour, who however were disqualified for their employments before his highness got to St. Helena. Tom himself married one of them, but was so great a favourite with the prince, that she still was appointed maid of honour, and with Tom's confent was afterwards married to an English duke.

Nothing can paint the agonies of our royal lover, when on his landing at Dublin he was informed that princess Bob had quitted Ireland, and was married to nobody knew whom. It was we'll for Tom that he was on Irish ground. He would have been chopped as fmall as rice, for it is death in China to mislead the heir of the crown through ignorance. To do it knowingly is no crime, any more than in other countries,

As a prince of China cannot marry a woman that has been married before, it was necessary for Mi Li to search the world for another lady equally qualified with mifs Bob, whom he forgot the moment he was told he must marry fomebody else, and fell equally in love with somebody elfe, though he knew not with whom. In this suspence he dreamt, " that he would find his destined spouse, whose father had lost the dominions which never had been his dominions, in a place where there was a bridge over no water, a tomb where nobody ever was buried nor ever would be buried, ruins that were more 3 more than they bad ever been, a fubterraneous passage in which there were dogs with eyes of rubies and emeralds, and a more beautiful menagerie of Chinese pheasants than any in his father's extensive gardens." This oracle seemed so impossible to be accomplished, that he believed it more than he had done the sirst; which shewed his great piety. He determined to begin his second search, and being told by the lord lieutenant that there was in England a Mr. Banks, who was going all over the world in search of he did not know what, his highness thought he could not have a better conductor, and sailed for England. There he learnt that the sage Banks was at Oxford, hunting in the Bodleian library for a MS. voyage of a man who had been in the moon, which Mr. Banks thought must have been in the western ocean, where the moon sets, and which planet if he could discover once more, he would take possession of in his majesty's name, upon condition that it should never be taxed, and so be lost again to this country like the rest of his majesty's dominions in that part of the world.

Mi Li took a hired post-chaise for Oxford, but as it was a little rotten it: broke on the new road down to Henley. A beggar advised him to walk into general Conway's, who was the most courteous person alive, and would certainly lend him his own chaife. The prince travelled incog. He took the. beggar's advice, but going up to the house was told the family were in the grounds, but he should be conducted to them. He was led through a venerable wood of beeches, to a menagerie 2 commanding a more glorious profpect than any in his father's dominions, and full of Chinese pheasants. The. prince cried out in ecstacy, Oh! potent Hih! my dream begins to be accomplished. The gardener, who knew no Chinese but the names of a few plants, was struck with the similitude of the founds, but discreetly said not a word. Not finding his lady there, as he expected, he turned back, and plunging fuddenly into the thickest gloom of the wood, he descended into a cavern totally dark, the intrepid prince following him boldly. After advancing a great way into this fubterraneous vault, at last they perceived light, when on a sudden they were purfued by feveral fmall spaniels, and turning to look at them, the prince perceived their eyes 3 shone like emeralds and rubies. Instead of being amazed, as Fo-Hi, the founder of his race, would have been, the prince renewed his exclamations, and cried, I advance! I advance! I shall find my bride! Great Hih! though art infallible! Emerging into light, the imperturbed gardener conducted his highness to a heap of artificial 4 ruins, be-Vol. IV.

neath which they found a spacious gallery or arcade, where his highness was asked if he would not repose himself; but, instead of answering, he capered like one frantic, crying out, I advance! I advance! Great Hih! I advance!-The gardener was amazed, and doubted whether he was not conducting a madman to his mafter and lady, and hefitated whether he should proceed; -but as he understood nothing the prince faid, and perceiving he must be a foreigner, he concluded he was a Frenchman by his dancing. As the stranger too was fo nimble and not at all tired with his walk, the fage gardener proceeded down a floping valley, between two mountains clothed to their fummits with cedars, firs, and pines, which he took care to tell the prince were all of his honour the general's own planting: but though the prince had learnt more English in three days in Ireland, than all the French in the world ever learnt in three years, he took no notice of the information, to the great offence of the gardener, but kept running on, and increased his gambols and exclamations when he perceived the vale was terminated by a stupendous bridge, that seemed compoied of the rocks which the giants threw at Jupiter's head, and had not a drop of water beneath 5 it.-Where is my bride, my bride? cried Mi Li-I must be near her. The prince's shouts and cries drew a matron from a cottage that flood on a pricipice near the bridge, and hung over the river.-My lady is down at Ford-house, 6 cried the good woman, who was a little deaf, concluding they had called to her to know. The gardener knew it was in vain to explain his diffress to her, and thought that if the poor gentleman was really mad, his master the general would be the properest person to know how to manage him. Accordingly, turning to the left, he led the prince along the banks of the river, which glittered through the opening fallows, while on the other hand a wilderness of shrubs climbed up the pendant cliffs of chalk, and contrafted with the verdant meads and fields of corn beyond the stream. The prince, infenfible to fuch enchanting fcenes, galloped wildly along, keeping the poor gardener on a round trot, till they were stopped by a lonely 7 tomb. furrounded by cyprefs, yews, and willows, that feemed the monument of fome adventurous youth who had been loft in tempting the current, and might have fuited the gallant and daring Leander. Here Mi Li first had presence of mind to recollect the little English he knew, and eagerly asked the gardener whose tomb he beheld before him? It is nobody's-Before he could proceed, the prince interrupted him: And will it never be any body's?-Oh! thought the gardener, now there is no longer any doubt of his phrenfy-and perceiving his mafter and the family approaching towards them, he endeavoured to get the start: but the prince, much younger, and borne too on the wings of love, fet out full speed the moment he saw the company, and particularly a young damsel with them. Running almost breathless up to lady Ailesbury, and seizing miss Campbell's hand—he cried, Who she? who she? Lady Ailesbury screamed, the young maiden squalled, the general, cool but offended, rushed between them, and, if a prince could be collared, would have collared him—Mi Li kept sast hold with one arm, but pointing to his prize with the other, and with the most eager and supplicating looks entreating for an answer, continued to exclaim, Who she? who she? The general, perceiving by his accent and manner that he was a foreigner, and rather tempted to laugh than be angry, replied with civil scorn, Why, she is miss Caroline Campbell, daughter of lord William Campbell, his majesty's late governor of Carolina—Oh, Hih! I now recollect thy words! cried Mi Li—And so she became princess of China.

Y y 2

NOTES

NOTES ON TALE V.

- * THERE really was fuch a perfon.
- ² Lady Ailefbury's.
- ³ A't Park-place there is fuch a passage cut through a chalk-hill: when dogs are in the middle, the light from the mouth makes their eyes appear in the manner here described.
 - * Confequently they feem to have been larger.
- ⁵ The ruftic bridge at Park-place was built by general Conway, to carry the road from Henley, and to leave the communication free between his grounds on each fide of the road. Vide Anecdotes of Painting.
- ⁶ The old woman who kept the cottage built by general Conway to command a glorious profpect. Ford-house is a farm-house at the termination of the grounds.
- 7 A fictitious tomb in a beautiful fpot by the river, built for a point of view: it has a small pyramid on it.

TALE VI.

A true Love Story.

In the height of the animolities between the factions of the Guelfs and Ghibellines, a party of Venetians had made an inroad into the territories of the Viscontis, sovereigns of Milan, and had carried off the young Orondates, then at nurse. His family were at that time under a cloud, though they could boast of being descended from Canis Scaliger, lord of Verona. The captors sold the beautiful Orondates to a rich widow of the noble family of Grimaldi, who, having no children, brought him up with as much tenderness as if he had been her son. Her sondness increased with the growth of his stature and charms, and the violence of his passions were augmented by the signora Grimaldi's indulgence. Is it necessary to say that love reigned predominantly in the soul of Orondates? or that in a city like Venice a form like that of Orondates met with little resistance?

The Cyprian Queen, not content with the numerous oblations of Orondates on her altars, was not fatisfied while his heart remained unengaged. Acrofs the canal, over-against the palace of Grimaldi, stood a convent of Carmelite nuns, the abbess of which had a young African slave of the most exquisite beauty, called Azora, a year younger than Orondates. Jet and japan were tawney and without lustre, when compared to the hue of Azora. Afric never produced a female so perfect as Azora; as Europe could boast but of one Orondates.

The fignora Grimaldi, though no bigot, was pretty regular at her devotions; but as lanfquenet was more to her tafte than praying, she hurried over her masses as fast as she could, to allot more of her precious time to cards. This made her prefer the church of the Carmelites, separated only by a small bridge, though the abbess was of a contrary faction. However, as both ladies ladies were of equal quality, and had no altercations that could countenance incivility, reciprocal curties always paffed between them, the coldness of which each pretented to lay on their attention to their devotions, though the fignora Grimaldi attended but little to the priest, and the abbess was chiefly employed in watching and criticifing the inattention of the fignora.

350

Not fo Orondates and Azora. Both constantly accompanied their mistresses to mass, and the first moment they saw each other was decisive in both breasts. Venice ceased to have more than one fair in the eyes of Orondates, and Azora had not remarked till then that there could be more beautiful beings in the world than some of the Carmelite nuns.

The feclusion of the abbess, and the aversion between the two ladies, which was very cordial on the fide of the holy one, cut off all hopes from the lovers. Azora grew grave, and penfive, and melancholy; Orondates furly and intractable. Even his attachment to his kind patroness relaxed. He attended her reluctantly but at the hours of prayer. Often did she find him on the steps of the church ere the doors were opened. The fignora Grimaldi was not apt to make observations. She was content with indulging her own passions, feldom restrained those of others; and though good offices rarely presented themselves to her imagination, she was ready to exert them when applied to, and always talked charitably of the unhappy at her cards, if it was not a very unlucky deal.

Still it is probable that she never would have discovered the passion of Orondates, had not her woman, who was jealous of his favour, given her a hint; at the same time remarking, under affectation of good will, how well the circumstances of the lovers were fuited, and, that as her ladyship was in years, and would certainly not think of providing for a creature she had bought in the public market, it would be charitable to marry the fond couple, and fettle them on her farm in the country.

Fortunately madame Grimaldi always was open to good impressions, and rarely to bad. Without perceiving the malice of her woman, she was struck with the idea of a marriage. She loved the caufe, and always promoted it when it was honeftly in her power. She feldom made difficulties, and never apprehended them. Without even examining Orondates on the state of his inclinations, without recollecting that madame Capello and she were of different parties, without taking any precautions to guard against a refusal, she instantly wrote to the abbess to propose a marriage between Orondates and Azora.

The latter was in madame Capello's chamber when the note arrived. All the fury that authority loves to confole itself with for being under restraint, all the asperity of a bigot, all the acrimony of party, and all the sictitious rage that prudery adopts when the fenfual enjoyments of others are concerned, burst out on the helpless Azora, who was unable to divine how she was concerned in the fatal letter. She was made to endure all the calumnies that the abbefs would have been glad to have hurled at the head of madame Grimaldi, if her own character and the rank of that offender would have allowed it. Impotent menaces of revenge were repeated with emphasis; and as nobody in the convent dared to contradict her, she gratified her anger and love of prating with endless tautologies. In fine, Azora was strictly locked up, and bread and water were ordered as fovereign cures for love. Twenty replies to madame Grimaldi were written and torn, as not fufficiently expressive of a resentment that was rather vociferous than eloquent; and her confessor was at last forced to write one, in which he prevailed to have fome holy cant inferted, though forced to compound for a heap of irony that related to the antiquity of her family, and for many unintelligible allufions to vulgar stories which the Ghibelline party had treasured up against the Guelfs. The most lucid part of the epistle pronounced a sentence of eternal chastity on Azora, not without some farcastic expressions against the promiscuous amours of Orondates, which ought in common decorum to have banished him long ago from the mansion of a widowed matron.

Just as this fulminatory mandate had been transcribed and signed by the lady abbes in full chapter, and had been consigned to the confessor to deliver, the portress of the convent came running out of breath, and announced to the venerable assembly, that Azora, terrified by the abbes's blows and threats, had fallen in labour and miscarried of four puppies: for be it known to all posterity, that Orondates was an Italian greyhound, and Azora a black spaniel.

POSTSCRIPT.

POSTSCRIPT.

THE foregoing Tales are given for no more than they are worth: they are mere whimfical trifles, written chiefly for private entertainment; and for private amusement half a dozen copies only are printed. They deserve at most to be considered as an attempt to vary the stale and beaten class of stories and novels, which, though works of invention, are almost always devoid of imagination. It would scarcely be credited, were it not evident from the Bibliotheque des Romans, which contains the sicitious adventures that have been written in all ages and all countries, that there should have been so little fancy, so little variety, and so little novelty, in writings in which the imagination is settered by no rules, and by no obligation of speaking truth. There is instinitely more invention in history, which has no merit if devoid of truth, than in romances and novels, which pretend to none.

MISCELLANEOUS PIECES

IN PROSE.

VOL. IV.

Zz

THE STATES MISCRILANEOUS PIECES