2. Kapitel.

Gebäude für Ministerien, Botschaften und Gesandtschaften.

VON ALBERT KORTÜM.

Die in Kap. 2 bis 4 dieses Abschnittes zu behandelnden Gebäude, welche den mannigfaltigsten Zweigen der staatlichen und der privaten Verwaltung zu dienen haben, werden je nach dem Herkommen und der Natur des betreffenden Verwaltungszweiges etc. bald Verwaltungsgebäude oder Dienstgebäude, bald Geschäftshäuser (bezw. -Gebäude) oder Amtshäuser (bezw. -Gebäude), bald Kanzleigebäude oder Administrationsgebäude etc. benannt.

a) Dienstgebäude für Ministerien und andere höchste Staatsbehörden.

Während die im vorigen Kapitel besprochenen Rathäuser eigenartige Anlagen darstellen und eine geschichtliche Entwicklung aufweisen, die viele Jahrhunderte zurückreicht, gehört die Einrichtung von Dienstgebäuden für Ministerien und andere höchste Staatsbehörden der neueren und neuesten Zeit an. Entsprechend dem Anwachsen und der Gliederung der einzelnen Zweige der verschiedenen Verwaltungen sind diese Gebäude in ihrer Anlage groß und zum Teil von bedeutenden Abmessungen, aber naturgemäß im allgemeinen einfach und weniger eigenartig angelegt. Mit dem wachsenden Wohlstande ist die Ausstattung im Inneren und Äußeren reicher und schöner geworden, so daß eine nicht unbedeutende Zahl stattlicher Neubauten von Ministerien etc. in neuester Zeit errichtet worden ist.

Dienstgebäude für Ministerien und andere höchste Staatsbehörden sind vor allem Geschäftshäuser und dienen in einzelnen seltenen Fällen sogar aus-
