

Center for the History of Women Philosophers and Scientists
Paderborn University, Germany

Nature in Anne Sophie Swetchine (1782–1857)

Conley John J.
Loyola University Maryland

Heavily influenced by Romantic Neo-Platonism, Mme Swetchine argues that an elaborate correspondence exists between the material structure of the cosmos and the psychic structure of the human soul. Material nature and human nature are mutually formative. “Everything in the visible world, in the world we touch or hear, comes to express what is in our heart or to respond to it. It is another language but the same history” (1875: 61). The sight of particular natural objects often provokes a corresponding effect in the viewer’s moral or affective character. The purity of mountain air can stimulate a sense of moral purity. Stony, rugged mountains can point to the difficulty of unresolved moral dilemmas. A glimpse of the sublime in the ocean or in the Alps can encourage the viewer to long for the spiritual sublime found in eternity.

Primary Sources:

Swetchine, Anne Sophie 1875. De la nature, in Madame Swetchine: sa vie et ses oeuvres, Falloux, Alfred de (ed), 2 vols. Paris: Didier et Cie, II: 61-65. [A digital version of the text is available at the Projet Gallica page of the website of the Bibliothèque nationale de France.]

Swetchine, Anne Sophie 1868. The Writings of Madame Swetchine; Preston, Harriet W. (trans). Boston: Roberts.

Secondary Sources:

Drozdek, Adam 2011. Madame Swetchine and her Faith, in Roczniki Historii Kosciola, 3 (58), 39-57.

Martinoir, Francine de 2011. Madame Swetchine ou Le ciel d'ici. Paris: Cerf.

Keywords:

character, correspondence, cosmos, nature, psychology, romanticism, sublime